

قراحت الالعمل

Weekend FT
Inside section B

News from the New Year -
FT writers on what is happening in 1994

Bread - the rising food fashion of 1994
Page VI

Travel - where it's hot and where it's not Page VII

FINANCIAL TIMES

82950
386

Europe's Business Newspaper

NEW YEAR JANUARY 1/JANUARY 2/JANUARY 3 1994

D8523A

US operator to be second force in UK satellite TV

TeleCommunications, largest US cable television operator, is to enter the UK cable and satellite market by merging its European channels with British media group Flextech. The deal will make the enlarged company the largest cable and satellite programmer in the UK after British Sky Broadcasting. Page 22; A change of channel for Flextech, Page 8

US adviser backed Banesto's president

The Bank of Spain dismissed the board of Banco Español de Crédito less than a day after its corporate finance adviser, US bank J.P. Morgan, expressed confidence in Banesto's president, Mario Conde. Page 22

Walgal predicts more cuts: German finance minister

Theresa Walgal expects the country's budget deficit to dip below 3 per cent of gross domestic product by 1995, but says public spending cuts will have to continue. Page 2

Olivetti, Italian computers group, is negotiating to cut its operations in Germany with the possible sale of part of its Triumph Adler office products subsidiary. Page 9

Closure fear hits Euro Disney shares

Shares in struggling leisure group Euro Disney fell to FF30.40 ($5.20) from FF33.00 on Thursday after Michael Eisner, chairman of Walt Disney, its US parent company, confirmed that the Euro Disney theme park may close unless Euro Disney is recapitalised. Page 9

Fresh floods feared: Flooding across large parts of western Europe could worsen in some regions this weekend. Page 2

Lloyd's boosted by corporate members

Lloyd's of London has attracted more than £900m ($1.33bn) from corporate investors taking advantage of the first chance in the insurance market's 305-year history to be protected by limited liability. Page 5

Footsie rises 20 per cent on year

The FT-SE 100 index gained more than 16 points on the London stock market in early trading yesterday, backed by a buy programme from one of the UK securities houses. But the day's peak of 3,445.5 was 35 points short of the year's trading high reached on Thursday. Yesterday's final reading, taken at 12.30pm, showed the Footsie at 3,418.4, down 10.4. The year's closing high of 3,462 was recorded on Wednesday. Over the year, the Footsie has risen by 20 per cent, or 571.9 points, driven by falling interest rates and growing confidence in economic recovery. London stocks, Page 13; Markets, Weekend II

N Korea nuclear talks make progress

The US and North Korea made substantial progress in negotiations to open North Korea's nuclear facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency, the US state department said. Page 3

China snubs Britain: President Jiang Zemin of China sent new year greetings to the country's friends, but excluded Britain, saying its "wrong stand" had "broken" negotiations on the future of Hong Kong. Page 3

Strikes hit Belgrade: Belgrade was hit by the biggest wave of industrial unrest in nearly three years of wartime conditions in the former Yugoslavia, despite a government deal with striking miners. Page 2

Rothmans' Asia plan thwarted: Rothmans International's plan to merge its tobacco operations in Hong Kong, Singapore and Malaysia was rejected by shareholders in the Malaysian company. Page 9

Smoke-free to Australia and New Zealand: British Airways is to ban smoking for a trial period on flights between the UK and Australia and New Zealand. The airline's domestic and short-haul European flights are already non-smoking.

For customer service and other general enquiries call:
Frankfurt
(69) 15685150

Where the grass was greener: the world's five biggest markets in 1993

Target rate of return for rail network body eased

Compromise with Treasury aimed at spurring interest by operators

By Roland Rudd
The UK government has reduced the rate of return it wants from its investment in Railtrack, which will run the country's rail infrastructure from April. The move is intended to boost interest among potential private rail operators.

After heavy lobbying from the Department of Transport, the Treasury has agreed to set Railtrack's initial rate of return at 5 per cent, in 1994-95, rising by 1 percentage point a year until it reaches 8 per cent. Railtrack argued that a lower rate of return would enable it to secure more private buy-outs for franchises under the government's rail privatisation initiative.

The Treasury previously insisted on an 8 per cent rate of return from its investment. Its decision to compromise on the issue of the rate of return is seen in Whitehall as a reflection of the government's determination to ensure that rail privatisation succeeds.

Mr Bob Horton, Railtrack's chairman, had argued strongly that he should have greater freedom from the financial limits that apply to nationalised industries. The Department of Transport, which has been keen for Railtrack to announce its pricing structure as soon as possible, is confident that the company

EEA links 17 nations in world's largest free trade zone

By David Gardner in Brussels

The European Economic Area, the world's largest free trade zone, comprising 17 countries and 372m people, starts what could be a short life today, a year behind schedule.

The EEA treaty extends the European Union's single market to five of the seven members of the more loosely-grouped European Free Trade Association - Austria, Finland, Norway, Sweden and Iceland.

All of these countries except Iceland are deep in negotiations with the EU on full membership of the 12 by January 1995, raising questions about the long-term value of the EEA.

By most criteria the EEA is a bigger free trade zone, and a much bigger force in world trade, than the North American Free Trade Agreement created between the US, Canada and Mexico, which also comes into force today.

EFTA figures for 1992 give combined EEA output at $7,501bn, ($5,068bn) against a combined gross domestic product of $6,770bn for Nafta countries. The EEA, creating a market from the Arctic to the Mediterranean, accounts for more than two-fifths of world trade.

In 1992, the EEA nations logged exports of $1,616bn ($3,878 per capita) against imports of $1,680bn. The three Nafta partners by comparison had exports of $5,404bn ($1,683 a head) against imports of $7,15bn, according to EFTA.

Unlike Nafta, moreover, the EEA - bound by a 1,000-page treaty with 12,000 pages covering more than 1,400 EU laws appended to it - extends beyond unfettered trade in goods to include most services and the creation of a single labour market. In particular, the "single

Rabin places blame on Arafat for pull-out delay

By David Horowitz in Jerusalem

Mr Yitzhak Rabin, Israel's prime minister, expressed growing frustration yesterday with Mr Yasser Arafat, intimating that the Palestine Liberation Organisation chairman was to blame for holding up Israel's troop withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and Jericho areas.

Mr Rabin said he had just received a faxed message from Mr Arafat which ignored the latest Israeli-PLO formula for Palestinian autonomy. Mr Arafat's response, he said, was "far from anything that was discussed and agreed" by Israeli and PLO negotiators in Cairo earlier this week.

Mr Shimon Peres, Israeli foreign minister, said on Wednesday that the two sides had reached agreement on key issues including the size of the Jericho area, joint Israeli-PLO border controls, and sole Israeli responsibility for security around the perimeters of the Palestinian autonomous areas.

But aides to Mr Arafat - who yesterday returned to his Tunis headquarters after visiting Cairo and Amman - claimed that there was no such joint agreement. The purported text of the deal, as published in the Israeli press on Thursday, was little more than an Israeli position paper, they maintained. Mr Yasser Arafat, a top adviser to Mr Arafat, described Mr Peres' talk of significant progress as "complete exaggeration. It is an attempt to bluff."

Such claims, said Mr Rabin yesterday, were "total nonsense." Israel had been ready to respect whatever was agreed at the Cairo talks, and he was certainly not prepared to allow the PLO to use the Cairo document as "a new starting line for negotiations."

While acknowledging that time was limited, Mr Rabin insisted that he would not be forced into signing a flawed agreement. There would be no concessions from the framework of the declaration of principles signed in Washington on September 13.

Mr Nabil Sha'ath, a PLO negotiator, said late on Thursday that he and his opposite number, Major-General Amnon Shahak, the Israeli deputy chief of staff, would next week begin intensive talks at the Egyptian beach resort of Taba, to try again to resolve the issues.

"We will just spend the next two weeks working day and night," he added.

But Mr Rabin refused to confirm that new talks were scheduled. Rather, he said, he would decide after the weekend how to proceed. There were no longer any sacred dates by which agreements had to be reached.

Independent's board is split over options for new fund

By Raymond Snoddy

The company which owns Britain's Independent and Independent on Sunday newspapers yesterday admitted publicly for the first time that its board is split over future funding.

Mr Ian Hay Davidson, chairman of Newspaper Publishing, said in a letter to staff that there were two competing options for bringing in new equity capital. The company lost £486,000 before tax in the year to September, and both of its titles have lost significant circulation in the past six months.

Before Christmas, the Independent - which began publication in 1986 - was struggling with a daily circulation of just over 300,000 and may have sunk further since. Shareholders together accounting for about 40 per cent of the unquoted company, plan to propose an additional trade partner.

Those shareholders are the Spanish newspaper El Pais and Italy's La Repubblica, backed by three directors, Mr Andreas Whitlam Smith, Mr Matthew Symonds and Mr Adrian O'Neill.

Continued on Page 22

Imro plans to tighten checks on UK investment managers

By Alison Smith

Britain's system for checking people who work in investment management is about to be tightened through new arrangements for registration of individuals.

The board of Imro, the self-regulatory body for the industry, has approved provisional plans to require such a register. At present, Imro registers only firms of financial advisers and fund managers, and so does not necessarily know who works for any given firm.

Imro members will be invited to comment on the proposals, due to be published early this month. Many people who would have to register as individuals will already have provided detailed information through questionnaires. They would not have to repeat that procedure, but would sign a form putting them in a new and direct contractual relationship with the regulator. Imro estimates that 15,000 to 20,000 individuals could be involved.

Mr Phillip Thorpe, Imro's chief executive, said the proposal had two targets in particular: people who had worked for Imro-member firms which had been disciplined and were subsequently employed by another firm; and individuals entering investment management from another area of financial services, perhaps covered by another regulator.

The Securities and Futures Authority already operates a system of individual registration.

While work began on the plans two to three months ago, the weakness of the current arrangements has been highlighted recently.

Noble Lowndes, the financial adviser, was fined £740,000 by Imro, because four of its personal financial services consultants had given clients unsuitable investment advice. Although none of the four is still with Noble Lowndes, Imro has no way of knowing whether any of them is still working in the industry.

Imro would issue guidance, but the onus would be on each firm to decide which individuals working for it needed to be registered. The requirement would be intended to apply wherever there was an element of investor protection.

Imro would issue guidance, but the onus would be on each firm to decide which individuals working for it needed to be registered. The requirement would be intended to apply wherever there was an element of investor protection.

Imro would issue guidance, but the onus would be on each firm to decide which individuals working for it needed to be registered. The requirement would be intended to apply wherever there was an element of investor protection.

Imro would issue guidance, but the onus would be on each firm to decide which individuals working for it needed to be registered. The requirement would be intended to apply wherever there was an element of investor protection.

Imro would issue guidance, but the onus would be on each firm to decide which individuals working for it needed to be registered. The requirement would be intended to apply wherever there was an element of investor protection.

Is your PEP taxing you?

HIGH CHARGES LOW PERFORMANCE Poor Administration

It's easy to lose sight of what should be your main priority in choosing a PEP. The potential for real long-term growth of your money.

That's what sets Foreign & Colonial apart. $1,000 invested in Foreign & Colonial Investment Trust PLC on 31st December 1993 is today worth $754,433. The same sum invested ten years ago has now grown to $6,269.

Over the years, we have outperformed insurance policies, Building Societies and also unit trusts, on which many PEPs are based.

A fact recognised by the 1992 Herapoll Performance Awards - first place over 1 year, 5 years and 10 years (larger investment trust group category) and 'Best Investment Trust Manager of the Year' for consistent overall performance.

Foreign & Colonial has nine investment trusts to meet your PEP objectives. Our portfolios are designed to provide capital growth and regular income across a spread of global, European and UK shares, including an investment trust specifically created for the PEP investor - Foreign & Colonial PEP Investment Trust.

Our low charges make our investment trusts one of the cheapest PEP investments in the City. A flat rate $50+VAT initial fee for lump sums and just $5+VAT a month administration charges. You can also transfer your existing PEP to Foreign & Colonial and we'll handle the administration free of charge.

Why suffer low performance, high charges and poor administration when you can choose a Foreign & Colonial PEP?

Please, in stating where you saw the advertisement (in print or on the coupon today, for your PEP brochure and application form.

Share in the success.

24 HOUR PHONE SERVICE 0734 341218

Foreign & Colonial

PERSONAL EQUITY PLAN

Investing in PEPs is a long-term strategy, and we encourage you to invest in PEPs for the long term. Please do not invest in PEPs for short-term speculation. The value of shares and the income from them will fall or rise and you may not get back the amount invested. The benefits may vary as a result of currency changes and other risks which are not mentioned in this advertisement. See your broker for more details.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

POSTCODE _____

NEWS: INTERNATIONAL

Alert as fresh European floods feared

Some EU countries have inadequate insurance cover, reports Our Foreign Staff

Flooding across large parts of western Europe this Christmas - which, it was feared, would worsen in some regions this weekend - has already caused hundreds of millions of pounds in damage and has highlighted the inadequacy of insurance cover in some countries.

Southern German cities could be hit by another deluge only days after water levels, the highest since the turn of the century, subsided. Officials in Cologne and Hanover said the Rhine could rise as fast as 2cm to 4cm per second, particularly if the unseasonably mild weather continues.

In south-east England the National Rivers Authority issued more flood warnings yesterday. Red alerts - warnings that flooding was imminent - were issued for the River Ouse and River Uck in East Sussex, between Isfield and Lewes and between Isfield and Uckfield. In Kent, red alerts were issued for the River Teise and Lesser Teise, and on the River Beult.

In France, during one of the wettest winters the country has ever experienced, the worst affected area is the Val d'Oise around Pontoise, where hundreds of people have already been evacuated from their homes. But the river Oise is still rising. The rivers Seine and Marne are also expected to rise further this weekend. The roads running alongside the Seine in central Paris yesterday were still closed to motorists.

There was also concern yesterday about north-eastern France, particularly the Vosges region, where there has already been heavy snow, and Alsace and Lorraine on the German border.

At the height of the flooding in the southern Dutch province of Limburg a fifth of the province was under water. Further flooding is thought possible during the New Year weekend, and troops are standing by to evacuate people from their homes if necessary.

Flood damage in the Netherlands is estimated at Fl 300m ($105m) - and none of it is insured. Dutch insurance companies have never offered water damage insurance to either their private or their corporate customers, and the December floods have revived calls for Dutch insurers to arrange a pooled form of insurance against flood damage.

UNDER WATER: aerial view of Warco in northern France (top left); Cologne in Germany (right); a woman rescued by boat in Bologne in southern France

It was another natural disaster in Limburg - a freak earthquake in April 1992 - that first focused attention on the lack of insurance cover in the Netherlands against two natural calamities, flooding and earthquakes. Insurance against damages caused by heavy winds is, however, a standard part of Dutch insurance policies.

After the 1992 earthquake, Dutch insurers put forward proposals for forming an insurance pool of Fl 50m for calamity damage, including damage caused by river water flooding. However, their willingness to provide cover depends on whether the government agrees to provide tax incentives. The insurance industry also wants the government to contribute money to the damages pool. The government has yet to respond, but the latest floods have increased pressure for action.

Bonn Finance Ministry has unveiled measures aimed at increasing tax allowances, or providing direct financial assistance, for those whose property has been damaged.

These include the right to claim between 30 per cent and 50 per cent of renovation costs. Compensation claims up to a certain level can be deducted from profits or offset against company expenses. Employees in agriculture will be exempt from at least part of their tax. Claims can also be placed on home improvement grants spread over five years.

The ministry has not yet issued any estimate for the cost of partially compensating people, largely because claimants have to assess the damage, and the floods have yet to end.

The UK and France seemed best prepared for the eventuality. The Association of British Insurers said: "We do not know how much the flood damage will cost. It is too early to say. But we feel it is unlikely to be enormous. It has not been associated with freezing weather. This is where the huge costs usually occur."

The French insurance industry is steeled itself for a bill of as much as FF3bn (£344m) to repair the damage there this Christmas. The December downturn is the latest in a string of natural disasters to have hit France in recent months, starting with the Camargue floods in October and heavy rains in Corsica during November. The insurance industry, which was also inundated with claims from farmers in southern France following the hailstorm in July, expects the final tally for 1993's freak weather conditions to reach at least FF4.3bn.

However, the insurers are cushioned, thanks to legislation implemented after the 1982 floods which created a central fund they can draw on after natural disasters. The industry ploughs around FF4bn a year into this fund, which has a healthy surplus.

By Ronald van de Krol in Amsterdam, Judy Dempsey in Berlin, Alice Rausthorpe in Paris and Stewart Dalby in London.

Slovaks mark a first year of misery

By Patrick Blum in Bratislava

As Slovaks prepared this week to celebrate their first year of independence they found little to cheer about in Bratislava, the capital, where revelers danced through the night 12 months ago.

The economy remains deeply in recession. Inflation is above 25 per cent and unemployment is 14 per cent and rising. Political infighting threatens to bring down the government whose paper-thin parliamentary majority could be overturned at any time on any vote. Demands for autonomy by ethnic Hungarians, who represent around 13 per cent of the country's population, are raising fears of ethnic tensions and friction with Hungary, historic ruler of the Slovak lands.

According to a recent poll, 60 per cent of Slovaks would oppose breaking up the former Czechoslovak federation if they could vote today though, like their Czech neighbours, they were never asked to vote on independence. The split was engineered chiefly by Mr Vladimir Meciar, the Slovak prime minister, and by Mr Vaclav Klaus, his Czech counterpart. The latter seized on the opportunity for a quick divorce that would leave the Czech Republic free to pursue its own accelerated drive towards a free-market economy.

The only party to campaign unambiguously for Slovak independence at the June 1992 general election was the Slovak National Party (SNS), but it won less than 10 per cent of the vote. Other parties mostly hoped to win greater economic and political autonomy within a reformed Czechoslovak federation, and none were prepared for the consequences of independence.

Democracy has suffered as a result in both countries, as evidenced by growing disillusionment with politicians in Slovakia and widespread cynicism in the Czech Republic over corruption among the business and political elite.

Dissatisfaction is greatest in Slovakia, where Mr Meciar's Movement for a Democratic Slovakia (HZDS) won 74 of the 151 parliamentary seats a year and a half ago, but now barely commands 16 per cent of support in opinion polls - the same as the left wing Party of the Democratic Left (SDĽ), successor to the former Communist party. But the SNS, the HZDS's partner in the recently formed coalition, is also falling badly with 14 parliamentary seats but only 7 per cent support in the polls.

The coalition, formed in November after months of haggling over government posts, promised political stability but it is already falling apart at the seams. The 1994 budget, only just scraped through parliament in December with a margin of three votes, two of which were cast in error by members of the opposition, while some coalition deputies abstained. In theory, the 66 seats of the HZDS and the 14 seats of the SNS assure the government of a clear majority but the HZDS has since lost another deputy, its ninth defection since the start of the year, and the SNS has split into two factions.

This makes early elections this year increasingly likely, unless Mr Meciar agrees to demands by president Michal Kovac for a broad coalition - a solution made more difficult by dislike of Mr Meciar by most of his rivals. Mr Meciar will resist any moves to replace him and only parliament can call elections. "A solution [to the crisis] is in the hands of parliament and the HZDS," says a senior official from the president's office.

Waigel foresees more German spending cuts

Judy Dempsey in Berlin and David Waller in Frankfurt

Mr Theo Waigel, Germany's finance minister, expects the budget deficit to dip below 3 per cent of gross domestic product by 1995, but warns public spending cuts will have to continue.

In an article in Handelsblatt, the German economics daily, Mr Waigel yesterday said decreasing the deficit, which accounts for 4 per cent of GDP, or DM70bn (£27.30bn), would mean limiting growth in public expenditure to 3 per cent of GDP.

In line with estimates by the Bundesbank and several economic institutes, the finance minister yesterday said GDP would grow at between 0.5 and 1.0 per cent throughout 1994. It contracted by 2 per cent in 1993.

The high budget deficit has been fuelled by the costs of unification, and the government's policy of subsidising consumption in eastern Germany at the expense of creating new jobs.

Mr Helmut Kohl, the Chancellor, said this week that the high level of financial transfers to eastern Germany would continue, even though economists believe it will demand even greater public expenditure cuts if Mr Waigel's timetable for reducing the budget deficit is to be met.

Mr Hans Tietmeyer, the Bundesbank president, yesterday reinforced the message of further spending cuts ahead.

Cuts in social security expenditure, however painful, would have to be part of future wages and fiscal policy, he said, while further tax increases should be ruled out.

Mr Tietmeyer said that only a distinct improvement in these policy areas would allow the Bundesbank latitude for further relaxation of German monetary policy.

Wave of strikes hits Belgrade

By Laura Silber in Belgrade

Belgrade was yesterday hit by the biggest wave of industrial unrest in nearly three years of war, despite a government deal with striking miners.

Much of the country was blacked out by power cuts after the miners' strike. Rail and municipal transport halted as workers protested for higher wages. And city undertakers, disgruntled with their low wages, also threatened to take to the streets.

The monthly inflation rate in December hit 1m per cent, making most wages worthless by the time they are paid. More than 1m workers have been laid off and many factories have shut down.

Leaders of the miners from Fifteen people were reported wounded by shelling in Bosnia's capital, Sarajevo, yesterday, as a top UN official warned that Bosnia's citizens were facing a further year of misery, writes Laura Silber.

Mr Tony Land, of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, said: "There's no logistic, no humanitarian reason why anyone in this country should be hungry or cold. It is completely political and military."

With little hope for the war would end soon, he reported in Sarajevo it was significantly harder to supply the besieged capital than a year ago. Food was held in areas held by Serbs and Croats, and people are hungry.

Bosnian radio reported a surge in fighting between Croat and government forces in the southern city of Mostar. President Franjo Tudjman of Croatia has said his forces will intervene if Muslim troops continue attacks.

that the government admit it was exporting power to neighbouring states. Tanjug said electricity was due to be restored throughout the country last night. As Serbs rushed to do their last-minute shopping before New Year holidays, state shops remained empty but markets were piled high with produce from the countryside and black-market goods, mostly from Hungary. Sucking pigs changed hands for D-Marks, which have virtually replaced the national currency, the dinar.

As chaos gripped Kalenic Pijaca - a main open-air market where people queued up to buy newspapers, wine from barrels, or raso, a liquid antidote for hangovers made from pickled cabbage - a local radio journalist appealed to citizens to refrain from shooting their guns - a Serbian new year tradition - in order to keep their strength for what promised to be a difficult 1994.

As chaos gripped Kalenic Pijaca - a main open-air market where people queued up to buy newspapers, wine from barrels, or raso, a liquid antidote for hangovers made from pickled cabbage - a local radio journalist appealed to citizens to refrain from shooting their guns - a Serbian new year tradition - in order to keep their strength for what promised to be a difficult 1994.

As chaos gripped Kalenic Pijaca - a main open-air market where people queued up to buy newspapers, wine from barrels, or raso, a liquid antidote for hangovers made from pickled cabbage - a local radio journalist appealed to citizens to refrain from shooting their guns - a Serbian new year tradition - in order to keep their strength for what promised to be a difficult 1994.

As chaos gripped Kalenic Pijaca - a main open-air market where people queued up to buy newspapers, wine from barrels, or raso, a liquid antidote for hangovers made from pickled cabbage - a local radio journalist appealed to citizens to refrain from shooting their guns - a Serbian new year tradition - in order to keep their strength for what promised to be a difficult 1994.

As chaos gripped Kalenic Pijaca - a main open-air market where people queued up to buy newspapers, wine from barrels, or raso, a liquid antidote for hangovers made from pickled cabbage - a local radio journalist appealed to citizens to refrain from shooting their guns - a Serbian new year tradition - in order to keep their strength for what promised to be a difficult 1994.

Agreement on oil prices

Russia is ready to co-operate on stabilising oil prices and reached agreements at talks with Omani Oil Minister Said bin Ahmed al-Shanfari this week. First deputy fuel and energy minister Anatoly Fomin said yesterday. Reuter reports from Moscow.

He gave no indication of whether Russia plans a special effort to cut output or exports as a result of the talks.

Moscow reshuffle may streamline cabinet

By Leyla Boulton

Russian government ministers are spending the new year holiday in a state of nervous anticipation on the eve of a cabinet reshuffle and streamlining of government.

Mr Sergei Vasiliev, the radical economist who heads the government's centre for monitoring the progress of economic reforms, is one of the authors of a blueprint for a leaner cabinet, which argues that administrative reform is essential for more efficient decision-making in a country notorious for labyrinthine and corrupt bureaucracy.

Mr Vasiliev's blueprint foresees a cut in the number of deputy prime ministers from eight to either one or three, a 20 per cent cut in the number of bureaucrats, and the abolition of some ministries and government committees. But it is unclear whether reforms or reformers will come out on top after the changes, which are expected to take place by January 11, when the new parliament convenes.

Russia has seen too many administrative re-organisations - designed to replace unpopular figures or create new jobs for friends - for any administrative reform to be credible until it actually happens.

Reformers who were promoted to the rank of deputy prime minister after Mr Yegor Gaidar was removed as prime minister a year ago will be among those who revert to being simple ministers. This would not necessarily represent a blow to reformers, if the prime minister, Mr Viktor Chernomyrdin, remained committed to sweeping economic reforms.

One appointment which will be watched for clues of the reform intentions of President Boris Yeltsin is the job of central bank governor, on which he will have the final decision.

The governor, Mr Vladimir Lukin, is a reformer. Mr Viktor Geraschenko would be staying. But his confirmation would trigger the resignation of Mr Boris Fyodorov, the finance minister, who has accused Mr Geraschenko of sabotaging attempts at financial stabilisation.

Compounding the difficulties, foreign investment, which had been counted on initially to help overhaul the Russian economy, has been slow in coming, mainly because of the country's political and legal instability. Of the 100 joint ventures created so far, only a few represent an investment of capital and know-how in its alluring enterprises.

"You've got to be either crazy or very rich to invest in Russia now," says Mr Andrei Klimov, a local businessman.

Mr Vladimir Zotin, the local chairman of Democratic Russia, the anti-Communist movement incorporated into Russia's Choice, believes it was reformers' own mistakes that fuelled the backlash against reforms in the parliamentary elections.

Mr Zotin cites as an example Mr Gorbunov's decision to allow privatised enterprises in Perm to keep kindergartens on their balance-sheet instead of transferring them to the municipal authorities. The result: factories sold or leased the kindergarten premises to private businesses, while 5,000-6,000 children remain without kindergarten places.

"In a worsening situation it is very difficult to talk convincingly about the delights of the future," says Mr Ergash Narulayev, head of the Unity and Agreement party.

But for all the mistakes, Mr Narulayev believes economic reforms have produced at least one crucial political result. By creating a class of property-owners with vested interests in the changes, the rush to switch state-owned enterprises to private ownership without too much concern about the results, has removed the threat of attempts to return to the old state-planning system.

Crackdown on hard currency

Russia today begins trying to enforce an ambitious ban on the use of hard currency cash for transactions in shops, hotels and restaurants and in other commercial transactions, writes Leyla Boulton. The ban, part of an attempt to bolster the rouble, will mean hundreds of hard-currency establishments in Moscow and elsewhere can accept only roubles, or credit cards.

Russia today begins trying to enforce an ambitious ban on the use of hard currency cash for transactions in shops, hotels and restaurants and in other commercial transactions, writes Leyla Boulton. The ban, part of an attempt to bolster the rouble, will mean hundreds of hard-currency establishments in Moscow and elsewhere can accept only roubles, or credit cards.

Russia today begins trying to enforce an ambitious ban on the use of hard currency cash for transactions in shops, hotels and restaurants and in other commercial transactions, writes Leyla Boulton. The ban, part of an attempt to bolster the rouble, will mean hundreds of hard-currency establishments in Moscow and elsewhere can accept only roubles, or credit cards.

Russia today begins trying to enforce an ambitious ban on the use of hard currency cash for transactions in shops, hotels and restaurants and in other commercial transactions, writes Leyla Boulton. The ban, part of an attempt to bolster the rouble, will mean hundreds of hard-currency establishments in Moscow and elsewhere can accept only roubles, or credit cards.

Russia today begins trying to enforce an ambitious ban on the use of hard currency cash for transactions in shops, hotels and restaurants and in other commercial transactions, writes Leyla Boulton. The ban, part of an attempt to bolster the rouble, will mean hundreds of hard-currency establishments in Moscow and elsewhere can accept only roubles, or credit cards.

Leyla Boulton reports from Perm, where doubts are growing about the virtues of free enterprise

Businesses slow to see benefit of Russian reforms

When Pharmacy No 24 in the industrial city of Perm began selling sexual devices instead of medicine, it reflected a disappointing void between the aims of Russian market reforms and their results so far. "Sexual desire is not an illness and a pharmacy is not a sex-shop," thundered a front-page article in the local evening newspaper.

That Pharmacy No 24 finds it more profitable to sell devices for sexual stimulation than scarce, subsidised medicines is as much a sign of a half-reformed economy as a failure of the authorities to implement the local equivalent of the trades description act.

Not only are the local authorities and enterprise managers short of market skills and funds but the success of reforms depends to a large degree on whether appropriate policies are pursued in Moscow. The enormous protest vote in Russia's parliamentary elections on December 12, spawned by the failure of reforms to deliver rapid benefits, was foreshadowed in Perm by a rising tide of doubts about the virtues of free enterprise.

"We were being somewhat romantic when we thought that privatising shops would quickly provide new services and competition, lower prices and improve standards of service," says Mr Yevgeny Sapiro, the deputy chief of the Perm regional administration, responsible for economic reform. "Unfortunately, despite the change in ownership, people's psychology is changing only very slowly."

A centre of heavy industry which is also rich in oil, gas and other natural resources, the region of Perm has made considerable progress with privatising the state-owned factories and shops.

But, apart from a wide range of expensive goods that have become available since prices and imports were liberalised two years ago, ordinary people have yet to see other benefits of reform. Inflation, now at 15 per cent a month, makes it difficult to start productive businesses; a widening gap between rich and poor is aggravated by the sight of young spies, factory directors and corrupt officials making fortunes from trading while industry languishes. The authorities seem unable to implement their own rules.

Mr Viktor Gorbunov, the official in charge of privatisation, says it is impossible to expect significant improvements in the performance of privatised enterprises when inflation rates remain so high and ineffective anti-monopoly legislation is failing to promote competition.

Although he says shares in more than a third of Perm's industrial enterprises have already been sold to the public as part of the nationwide privatisation programme, the central government has yet to create a secondary market enabling shares to be traded. The banking system can take weeks to transfer money from one Russian town to another, aggravating the debts accumulated between enterprises which continue to supply goods without demanding payment from each other.

The inflation which makes trading the only profitable activity at present marks reformers' chief dilemma: whether to opt instead for anti-inflation policies that would cut subsidies to unprofitable businesses but cause a big increase in unemployment.

السؤال الثاني

THE UNIVERSITY OF LIBRARY
SERIALS NO. 67 950
CLASS
DATE 1 DEC 1994

China chills UK out of festive cheer

By Louise Lucas in Hong Kong

President Jiang Zemin of China last night heralded the new year with warm greetings to all China's friends - especially compatriots in Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan - but stopped short of extending the cordial spirit to Britain. Its "wrong stand" had "broken" negotiations on the future of Hong Kong, he said in a speech on China Radio International. Attacks on both Britain and Mr Chris Patten, governor of Hong Kong, intensified in the final days of 1993, suggesting the relationship would continue to deteriorate this year. Mr Zhou Nan, director of China's Xinhua news agency, used his televised new year message to urge Hong Kong people to accelerate preparatory work for the formation of the new government which will take up the territory's reins in 1997. He said Britain's violation of all joint agreements aimed at ensuring a smooth transition to Chinese rule meant this was the only way to guarantee stability and prosperity in the colony.

However, the rhetoric has not hit the colony's vibrant markets. The stock market closed the year at an all-time high of 11,888.39.

Sino-British relations, already tense, worsened after Mr Patten introduced elements of his bill to extend democracy in the territory to the Legislative Council on December 15. Reuter reports from Beijing: China, which in 1993 ran its first trade deficit in four years, is planning tough curbs on some imports, the official China Daily said yesterday. "China will adopt strict measures to regulate the importation of machinery and electronics products," the newspaper said, adding the new rules would take effect from today.

The report did not say how the rules would hit China's trade with the US. Washington has been trying to force Beijing to accept more imports since China's trade surplus with the US rose to some $23bn in 1993, from $18.3bn the previous year.

A security guard and a rescue worker help a relative after the latter had identified a victim of the gun and grenade attack on a Cape Town bar late on Thursday

Black gunmen killed four people and wounded five in an attack on a crowded Cape Town bar on Thursday night, the second such attack in the city in six months, Reuter reports from Cape Town.

Two men purporting to speak for separate black underground groups - the Azanian People's Liberation Army and the Azanian National Liberation Army - yesterday claimed responsibility for the attack. The authenticity of these calls could not be confirmed yesterday.

South African President F W de Klerk said the attack appeared to have been designed to undermine the transition of the country to majority rule. "There could be no justification for this barbaric deed," he said.

The Law and Order Ministry said claims would be thoroughly investigated. Police offered a R200,000 ($40,000) reward for information leading to the capture of the killers and set up barriers on all main roads out of Cape Town.

Three of the victims were young women shot at close range as they huddled in a corner of the bar, witnesses said. The fourth victim, a man, was cut down by gunfire as he tried to halt the carnage. Several of the dead and wounded were white, witnesses said.

The tactics used were similar to those adopted by black gunmen who killed 10 worshippers at St James's Church in Cape Town in July. More than 30 people were wounded and one later died. The gunmen are believed to be still at large.

Indian minister to stay

By Shiraz Sidhu in New Delhi

Mr P V Narasimha Rao, Indian prime minister, yesterday rejected the resignation of Mr Manmohan Singh, finance minister, ending a week of uncertainty about India's economic reform programme.

Mr Singh offered his resignation on December 24, after a parliamentary committee report had implicated the finance ministry in the Bombay financial scandal.

An official said the prime minister had decided not to accept the resignation after a parliamentary debate on Wednesday and Thursday. The opposition had vociferously demanded that Mr Singh's resignation be accepted but the prime minister decided the minister would defend himself and the role of the government in the scandal.

The spokesman said the prime minister had written to the finance minister saying that the government had set itself an enormous agenda which needed to be completed.

Mr Singh, considered a main architect of India's economic liberalisation, rebutted several charges by the parliamentary committee which investigated the Bombay scandal.

US, N Korea 'progress' on nuclear arms

By Jurek Martin, US Editor, in Washington

The US and North Korea are reported to have made substantial progress in negotiations to defuse tension over the latter's nuclear weapons programme.

Reflecting a sense of guarded optimism evident in Washington, a State Department spokesman said the US had "moved closer" to achieving its goal of opening the North's nuclear facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency. He added that progress had also been made on the question of promoting a dialogue between the two Koreas on nuclear matters.

The North Korean state news agency quoted a foreign ministry official in Pyongyang as having said the facilities would be made available for limited inspection shortly, with full access under negotiation.

The official, who called fruit of the latest negotiations a "breakthrough", also said the US was willing to end its annual joint military exercises with South Korea, known as Team Spirit, as the North has long demanded, and to improve diplomatic relations.

The US has been seeking a resolution on several diplomatic fronts, including the most recent round of negotiations at the United Nations in New York and through the intercession of other Asian nations, including China and Russia, which were once North Korea's principal patrons.

Concern has risen most recently in the wake of a leaked US Central Intelligence Agency report believed to have concluded that the North may already have built one or two nuclear bombs.

White House and State Department officials have refused to confirm or deny this report. This week, a senior member of the administration said: "The basic fact is that we don't know for sure" whether North Korea had built a bomb or had the ability to deliver it. In their diplomacy, US officials have resolutely refused to call the North Korean issue a "crisis", while conceding it is "urgent". This has prompted some criticism in Washington by those who believe the US should be taking a firmer line with the North.

The rising yen means pain for a supplier

Michio Nakamoto visits a silent factory that used to hum for Sanyo

Year-end is a quiet time for factories in the Japanese countryside as brightly polished machinery lies idle, awaiting the start of work in the new year.

But these days, the silence that surrounds the factory of Sanritsu Electric at Tokushima, on the southern island of Shikoku, is not limited to the holiday season.

Since October, the 170 employees of the factory have been forced to stay away, although they are still on the payroll and receive 90 per cent of their wages.

The factory, which has supplied Sanyo Electric with consumer electronic products for 25 years, was suddenly told in August that Sanyo would no longer be ordering products from Tokushima. Production of compact disc/cassette players, which the Tokushima plant had supplied, was to move to Singapore.

Two months later, Sanritsu's Tokushima factory was out of orders.

Sanritsu's plight reflects the difficulties facing Japan's electronics manufacturers amid the yen's sharp appreciation last year.

Japanese electronics makers have been moving production overseas so as to take advantage of lower labour costs overseas but many of the larger companies have tried to avoid closing domestic factories by moving low-end products abroad and keeping the manufacture of higher value-added products in Japan.

Where this is not possible, Japanese corporate etiquette calls for consultations with the factory's labour unions and a plan to make gradual the pain of job losses.

Sanritsu might have been expected, particularly from Sanyo, which has a 20 per cent stake in its supplier. Yet that does not seem to have happened at Tokushima. Sanyo was not comment but the apparent suddenness and clumsiness with which Sanyo handled the closure suggest that the yen's rise had been so rapid and sharp that the company had no scope to devise a smoother disengagement.

"We were completely taken by surprise," says Mr Junichi Nakatsuma, chairman of the Sanritsu branch of the National Metal and Machinery Workers' Union.

But employees at Tokushima had known for some time that things were not what they used to be. In autumn 1992, Sanyo had warned Sanritsu that output would fall. Production of CD/radio/cassette recorders had been halved from 1,000 units a day at their peak to 300 by summer 1993. There was talk of restructuring and, last spring, the factory had to close for 40 days.

However, Sanyo had said earlier last year that it would order new products from the factory in September so "two months' work would be available," Mr Nakatsuma says. "Sanyo employees see that Sanyo needs to lower its prices to stay competitive, which means moving production beyond Japan. It will be a huge burden on Sanyo to continue production at Tokushima," says Mr Hiroaki Nakamura, head of the factory. Mr Nakatsuma agrees. With larger makers lowering prices, Sanyo has little choice, he says.

The union leader believes Sanyo decided to move production abroad once a competitor had begun to produce a new product - a multiple CD stacking player which Sanyo was also planning - in China.

But he still holds Sanyo responsible for the grim future Sanritsu employees face. "For 25 years, we have been a manufacturing plant for Sanyo, even though we are an independent company," Mr Nakatsuma says. "Everything we did had to be approved by Sanyo and it was difficult for a company partly owned by Sanyo to get work from another company. We were completely dependent on Sanyo."

Most of the equipment on Sanritsu's spartan factory floor has been leased from Sanyo and the signs on the walls proclaim Sanyo slogans.

In a small town such as Kawasima, site of the Sanritsu factory, there is little alternative work. Many of the suppliers to large electronics, automotive and paper companies have already moved to deal with falling output, for instance through temporary closures.

Many of Sanritsu's employees at Tokushima have worked for the company for more than 20 years. "Closure of the factory is a matter of life and death for them and we don't feel Sanyo has taken enough responsibility in that respect," Mr Nakatsuma says.

The discord highlights the difficulties Japanese companies face in trying to cut the umbilical cord that ties them to their suppliers, particularly those in which they have an equity stake.

When they realised what was happening, Sanritsu's labour unions went into action. Pressure was put on local politicians, who in turn put pressure on the labour ministry. Outside Sanritsu's factory are large placards calling on Sanyo to keep the factory alive.

The bad publicity forced Sanyo to offer a concession. It said it was willing to bring part of its production of CD/radio/cassette recorders back to Japan so as to keep Tokushima going for two years.

The production volume, however, requires a cut in the workforce from 170 to 80, and Sanyo wants to choose the fortunate. But Sanritsu's largest labour union refuses forced redundancies, leaving negotiations stalled.

The workers want more time to allow the plant to seek work from other electronics groups. "We are asking for a gradual shift to independence," a union leader says. He has no doubts: "Sanyo must take responsibility for that."

FT·JAPAN CLUB ANNUAL REPORT SERVICE

Energia

Koki Tada
President and Director

The Chugoku Electric Power Co., Inc. has the responsibility for supplying power in the Chugoku region. Its related operations include the construction of power plants and equipment for transmission, transforming and distribution, as well as maintenance.

The Chugoku region comprises 32,000 square kilometres, and holds about 7,840,000 inhabitants. The Chugoku region is an important part of Japan's industrial economy. The internationalisation of the region is expected to accelerate further with Hiroshima hosting the 12th Asian Games in 1994. Chugoku Electric is dedicated to developing the region's potential as a supplier of electric power and is willing to contribute to the region making full use of its management resources.

HITACHI

Tsutomu Kawai
President and Representative Director

The corporate principle of Hitachi, Ltd., which was founded in 1910, is to contribute to society through technology. In the 83 years since its inception, the company has become one of the world's leading manufacturers of electrical and electronic equipment, with fiscal 1992 consolidated sales of ¥7,536 bn, $15 consolidated subsidiaries, 219 of which are overseas companies, and more than 330,000 employees. Hitachi believes that corporate progress is driven by research and development. Annual expenditure on R & D amounts to over ¥500 bn, or about 7% of sales. Hitachi's main products are computers, semiconductors, telecommunications equipment, power generating equipment, industrial machinery and consumer products. Hitachi's shares are listed on eight stock exchanges in Japan and on exchanges in New York, Frankfurt, Amsterdam, Paris and Luxembourg.

The Nikko Securities Co., Ltd.

Now in its 75th year, The Nikko Securities Co., Ltd. remains at the forefront of the Japanese financial market. Successfully pursuing its policy of globalisation, it has become one of the leading international securities firms and investment banks.

Nikko continues its role as an innovator with its breakthroughs in investment technology (IT) and by its development of sophisticated financial products. Nikko is poised to enter the 21st century as one of the world's leading financial companies.

Looking ahead to the changes in the world's financial market that the next century will bring, we will continue to provide the latest investment opportunities and financial products to our customers.

BANK OF TOKYO

Tetsuo Tokagi
President and Chief Executive Officer

"I am pleased to welcome the Bank of Tokyo's membership in the FT Japan Club, which we hope will enhance communication with investors in the United Kingdom and elsewhere."

The Bank of Tokyo Group is Japan's leading global financial institution, with more than a century of experience in international markets and a network of over 400 offices, subsidiaries and branches worldwide.

In the year ended March 31, 1993, the Group continued to expand net profit of core business, supported by the fourth consecutive year of double-digit growth in net interest income. At 9.66%, the Group's BIS capital adequacy ratio is the highest of Japan's 14 major banks.

SHISEIDO COMPANY LIMITED
Dedicated to the Science of Beauty and Wellbeing

Yoshitaka Fukuhara
President and C.E.O.

Founded in 1872, Shiseido is one of the world's largest cosmetics companies, bringing a distinctive blend of science and aesthetics to its activities.

Shiseido manufactures and markets quality make-up and skin-care products, fragrances, toiletries, professional salon-use items, foods, and pharmaceuticals in more than 60 countries.

In Japan, the company also manages restaurants, fitness clubs, and fashion boutiques. In fiscal 1993, consolidated net sales reached US$4,553 million, with consolidated net profits of US$360 million before taxes. Net income per share was US$0.29, and cash dividends were declared at US$0.10 per share of common stock, on par with fiscal 1992.

TORAY INDUSTRIES

Katsunosuke Maeda
President & CEO

Founded in 1936, Toray Industries, Inc., is Japan's largest manufacturer of synthetic fibers and textiles, high-performance films, and engineering plastics. Toray leads the world in the development and production of carbon fiber and other advanced composite materials.

Building on its unique technological strength, Toray is diversifying into chemicals, pharmaceuticals, medical supplies, electronics materials, housing and construction materials and engineering.

A truly global enterprise, Toray's international marketing and manufacturing network spans more than 180 subsidiaries and affiliated companies worldwide. In all of the communities it serves, the company strives to play a full and constructive role.

PIONEER ELECTRONIC CORPORATION

Seiya Matsumoto
President and Representative Director

Pioneer Electronic Corporation is a world leader in consumer, commercial and industrial AV (audio/visual) fields, especially those involving laser optical technologies. Pioneer has introduced several innovative products such as laser disc (LD) players, car CD players, laser karaoke systems, rewritable videotext recorders, high-definition LD players and car navigation systems.

The company is now actively combining audio, video and communications technologies into new products and systems that will create new markets and further broaden Pioneer's business horizons.

Pioneer's shares are listed on Tokyo, Osaka, New York (ticker: symbol PIO), Amsterdam and Luxembourg stock exchanges.

FT · JAPAN CLUB ANNUAL REPORT SERVICE

Please send me these Annual Reports: Tick boxes ☐

- ☐ The Chugoku Electric Power Co
- ☐ Hitachi
- ☐ The Nikko Securities Co. Ltd.
- ☐ Bank of Tokyo
- ☐ Shiseido Company Limited
- ☐ Toray Industries
- ☐ Pioneer Electronic Corporation

Please attach your business card or write your name and address in this space.
Please use BLOCK CAPITALS

Mail or Fax to :FT-Japan Club Annual Report Service
Dept. 3000, PO Box 384, Sutton Surrey SM1 4XE United Kingdom (Fax No. +44 81 770 3822) to reach us no later than 1st April 1994

Travel agencies extend price-cut campaign

By Michael Skapinker, Leisure Industries Correspondent

The three largest travel agencies are to continue their price-cutting campaign for another week amid signs that the surge in holiday bookings has ended.

discounts on summer 1994 holidays until January 8.

The three chains launched their 11 per cent discounts immediately after Christmas. Travel agents said yesterday, however, that the level of bookings last week had been no higher than the equivalent period a year ago.

Thomas Cook said it estimated that 200,000 holidays for this summer were sold last week by travel agents, about the same level as in the post-Christmas period last year.

Mr Kevin Welch, marketing director of Goring Places, formerly the Hogg Robinson and Pickfords Travel chain, said: "Last week's trading has been excellent, exceeding our expectations. Most branches have also seen an exceptionally high brochure pick-up, which augurs well for future bookings."

In contrast, Thomas Cook said: "The reality is we don't think there's been a dramatic increase on last year. We're seeing the market leveling off." Lunn Poly confirmed that booking levels since Christmas had been about the same as a year ago. The slow-down in bookings follows a highly successful campaign last autumn to persuade people to buy their summer 1994 holidays early.

Thomson, the largest tour operator, said it had sold 1m summer holidays by Christmas - double the number sold by Christmas 1993. Air-tours, the second biggest operator, said last month that its summer 1994 sales were up 53 per cent.

The travel industry accepted that the rate of increase in sales was unsustainable. Most expect the final tally for summer 1994 sales to be 5 per cent to 10 per cent up on 1993.

The travel agents' decision to extend discounting for a further week is largely an attempt to win market share. As an 11 per cent discount cancels out the average commission on a sale, most chains said they did not expect the price-cutting to continue for more than a week.

Major defends tax increases

By Roland Rudd

Mr John Major said yesterday that the government had to raise taxes and cut spending to ensure that the economic recovery would last.

In his new year message, the prime minister predicted that unemployment would continue to fall as the recovery gathered speed. But he said he had to raise taxes because his overriding objective was "sound finances", otherwise the recovery would be built on sand.

"The Conservative party remains the party of the lowest possible tax and the only party whose instinct is to cut tax and leave money with individuals and families and not take it for the state," he said. "We raise taxes only when we have to. They [opposition parties] raise taxes whenever they want to."

Mr Alan Beith, Liberal Democrat Treasury spokesman, said the prime minister's message deserved action under the Trades Descriptions Act. "The party which has given us the biggest ever tax increases claims to be the party of low taxation."

Mr John Smith, Labour leader, said people would face higher taxes and higher bills in 1994. "A typical family will have to pay £10 a week more in tax by the end of the year when all the new taxes come into effect," he said. "This extra burden of tax will rise to £16 a week more in April 1995."

In his new year message, Mr Smith warned that as many as 95 per cent of households would be worse off next year because of higher taxes.

But Mr Major said it was time for the country to be more confident and said pessimists should be put "in their box".

He went on to stress that the joint declaration on Ulster that he signed with Mr Albert Reynolds, the Irish prime minister, made clear that the majority in Northern Ireland would decide whether they wanted to remain within the UK.

"The choice is for them alone," he said. "But one thing is certain: so long as they want to be part of the union, they have a rock solid constitutional guarantee that they can do so."

However, he sent a message to the men of violence: "If you lay down your arms - and prove you mean it - then the way will be open for Sinn Féin to join the politics of the IRA to come to the negotiating table."

"We have thrown down the gauntlet of peace. So now the onus is on Sinn Féin to pick it up. There is no excuse and no justification for them not to choose the path to democracy."

Mr Major concluded by underlining the importance he attaches to the European elections in June. "The European Parliament matters to the future of Europe," he said. "So the elections matter to us. That is why we must fight them to win."

Mr Peter Morgan, director-general of the Institute of Directors, said in a new year message to members.

Sir Michael Angus, CBI president, said in his new year message that prospects for the coming 12 months were more hopeful than at the end of 1993.

CORRECTION

Business failures

A chart of total business failures in yesterday's FT omitted a zero. Business failures in 1993 totalled 48,066.

1963: scandal and an ailing 'Supermac'

Official documents released yesterday under disclosure rules shed light on cabinet machinations of 30 years ago

The year 1963 is often characterised as one when the government seemed to be running out of steam - even before it was rocked by the Profumo scandal.

Harold Macmillan's Supermac image looked increasingly jaded as the government stumbled from spy scandals to the French veto on its bid to join the European Economic Community.

Before the end of 1963 the ailing Macmillan had been replaced as prime minister by Sir Alec Douglas-Home, who lost the following year's general election to Labour.

The year is remembered by many for the assassination of President Kennedy and the great train robbery where a gang escaped with mailbags containing more than £1m after hijacking a train.

But cabinet documents for 1963, released yesterday at the Public Record Office in Kew, west London - under the rule that they should normally be made public after 30 years - contradict the image of a government that had gone stale. The final months of the Macmillan years saw a strikingly busy and varied programme of government activity.

Ministers approved the Beeching plan which led to wide-ranging cuts in the British Rail network and, with the Buchanan report, took the first steps towards recognising that unrestrained traffic growth in towns could not continue for ever.

In spite of the French veto on Britain's application to join the EEC, the cabinet discussed building the Channel tunnel. Thirty years later the tunnel is built but, perhaps happily, another potential project of the era is not. The Macmillan cabinet had ideas for demolishing the Foreign Office in Whitehall, possibly replacing it with a structure of "fully contemporary design".

Alan Pike

Profumo papers remain censored

The extent to which the Macmillan government was shaken by the Profumo affair emerges from the cabinet papers. And sensitivities over the affair obviously remain - with sections of the papers censored.

John Profumo, the war minister, was challenged about his relationship with model Christine Keeler by one of prime minister Harold Macmillan's senior officials weeks before the public first heard of the scandal.

But Profumo - who was to resign from government and parliament on June 5 that year - suggested when he was first confronted that Macmillan need not be told.

Many of the papers on the affair are missing from the documents - including three from the prime minister's own files.

The earliest document in the prime minister's files on the affair - recording a visit to Whitehall officials by someone with information about the Profumo-Keeler relationship - has seven short sections obliterated from the released two-page photocopy.

This was clearly done to hide the identity of the informant. The official who met him on February 1 1963 had promised "to do his best" to protect the source of information.

On the same day Macmillan's principal private secretary, T.J. Bligh, went to see Profumo and asked him about the story, warning him of possible newspaper reports.

"Mr Profumo suggested that I need not bother the prime minister with this at this stage," Mr Bligh reported in his note, written on the same day. "I said that it seemed to me of great importance to him personally that he should tell the chief whip without delay."

"If this story was going the rounds and the chief whip got to hear about it from some other source first, that would be bad for him. Mr Profumo was grateful for the advice and arranged to see the chief whip on Monday February 4."

The affair rose to the top of the cabinet agenda in June when Profumo resigned his post, confirming one part of the scandal surrounding his friendship with Stephen Ward, the London catnip and artist, and Keeler.

Ward, who faced charges of living off immoral earnings, had claimed that the minister used his flat to meet Miss Keeler. Now Profumo admitted that he had lied to the Commons in a statement made earlier in the year when he said there had been "no impropriety whatsoever".

While the public feasted on a series of salacious revelations, the cabinet wrestled with the embarrassing discovery that a member of government had committed a serious breach of trust in misleading his colleagues and parliament. The

Driven out: John Profumo was challenged about his relationship with Keeler by an official weeks before the public heard of the scandal minutes conceded that public opinion was "shaken by the disclosure that a minister of the crown could so far abuse the unique degree of privilege attaching to a personal statement in parliament as deliberately to mislead his colleagues in the government and the House of Commons".

An internal inquiry carried out by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Dilhorne, developed into a "who-knew-what-when" exercise. This was particularly important since two years before the Commons statement Mr Profumo had been warned to end his association with Mr Ward. The warning, delivered by Sir Norman Brook in 1961, was issued at the behest of the security services concerned about Mr Ward's friendship with Captain Eugene Ivanov, the Soviet assistant naval attaché to the UK.

The minutes concur with the conclusion of the subsequent Denning Inquiry that neither the minister nor the security services had known at that time about the Keeler connection.

That no breach of security had taken place. Alterations made to Lord Dilhorne's internal report into the affair - after new evidence emerged - suggest, however, that Mr Ward had known more about Mr Profumo than he wanted to disclose. A reference to the security service possessing "information" on Mr Ward is deleted from the first draft of the report without explanation.

The government's initial anxiety was not misplaced. Lord Denning concluded that the prime minister and his colleagues had not succeeded in dealing with the widespread public belief that Mr Profumo had committed adultery.

Richard Donkin

'Dictatorial' de Gaulle blamed for EEC crisis

Ministers ruled out the possibility of continuing negotiations with other five European Economic Community partners when France vetoed British membership in January 1963.

The cabinet was told that the five governments were seriously disturbed by the "dictatorial attitude" of General Charles de Gaulle, the French president, and might be willing to continue negotiations to embarrass France. But ministers concluded that the five would not ultimately abandon France in favour of Britain.

On January 14, the day negotiations on Britain's application for membership resumed in Brussels, President de Gaulle made a public statement opposing British entry. Although the negotiations did not formally come to an end for another fortnight, the cabinet knew from this point that the British application was almost certainly doomed. Cabinet minutes show that, after the president's statement, one of the government's overriding objectives was to ensure that the French took maximum blame for the failure of the talks.

Harold Macmillan, the prime minister, told the cabinet that de Gaulle's intervention did not reflect his conviction that the Brussels negotiations had failed, but his realisation that any entry within sight of success. Such success, said Macmillan, would have been incompatible with de Gaulle's ultimate purpose of creating a Franco-German alliance to dominate Europe.

De Gaulle, the cabinet was told, had alleged that Britain had made secret agreements with the US designed to transform the EEC into an Anglo-Saxon free-trade area.

The minutes make clear the extent to which the government regarded failure of the EEC application as a serious setback to its policies.

Ministers agreed that they should not abandon the objective of joining the community, but saw little purpose in seeking to develop a more limited economic association with the EEC. This, they decided, would not enable Britain to take part in shaping the community's policies, while probable French conditions on any such association would be unacceptable.

Alan Pike

Doubt cast on PM's resignation

Harold Macmillan may have been calculating his resignation as prime minister earlier than it appeared when he was suddenly admitted to hospital in October 1965.

An unsigned and undated draft letter from Macmillan to "Rab" Butler, the foreign secretary, marked "not sent", shows that the prime minister had made up his mind to resign before entering hospital.

Newspapers at the time were told that a decision on his future depended on the outcome of the operation - but the letter indicates that the prime minister had already made his decision.

It says: "As you know I am going into hospital for some weeks to have an operation for prostate trouble. This blow to my health has made me decide that I should, when I am well enough to see the Queen, resign my position as prime minister and leader of the party."

I do not propose to announce this decision at this stage. But I should be grateful if you and any members whom you care to consult would decide how best to apply this decision to resolving the problems which we have discussed, both in relation to the party conference at Blackpool and the succession."

The fact that the letter was never sent lends support to the conviction that Macmillan deliberately undermined Butler's ambitions to succeed him. Why it was written at all and who drafted it remain unclear.

Richard Donkin

Regional divide narrows

Recession has narrowed the north-south divide, figures from the Central Statistical Office showed yesterday.

South-east England slipped back while Scotland, Northern Ireland and the north moved forward. But an east-west divide opened up with East Angles seeing the biggest rise and north-west England showing the steepest fall.

Regional figures for 1992 showed that while gross domestic product per head in Greater London was down almost 2 per cent on 1991, Scotland, Northern Ireland and the north saw their second successive relative increase. Total GDP in 1992 was £214bn, up 4 per cent on 1991. More than a third was accounted for by the south-east, with Greater London alone responsible for 14.7 per cent.

Sold down the river for a second bridge

Today the toll for cars to cross the Severn Bridge between England and Wales rises to £3.40 from £3.10 - a figure the Royal Automobile Club had already condemned as "extortionate". For heavy trucks, the toll increases from £9.30 to £10.10.

A small consolation for drivers is that they now have a fine view of where most of the money goes: the privately-financed £300m second Severn crossing.

Three miles downstream from the existing bridge the concrete caissons for the foundations of the new one, some weighing 3,000 tonnes, straddle the estuary like stepping stones. In the middle of the channel the two main pylons are rising at the rate of one metre a day towards their eventual height of 137 metres.

Roland Adburgham on the controversial means of financing a new Severn crossing to south Wales increase to nearly 1,000 for which will be of the year of activity. It is one of the largest construction projects in Europe and a prime example of the government's intention to attract more private investment into infrastructure.

Severn River Crossing, a consortium of John Laing and GTM-Entrepreneurs of France, is the main contractor, with Bank of America and Barclays de Zoete Wedd as financial partners.

The consortium took over the existing bridge in 1992 with a concession to operate both crossings for a maximum of 30 years, after which ownership reverts to the government. Debt finance to build the new bridge is repaid by tolls, which are allowed to rise annually by inflation plus 6 per cent until 1996, then by inflation alone.

The new bridge will have three lanes in each direction, a span of nearly 1km and an overall length, with its viaducts, of more than 5km. A toll plaza of 14 lanes will be built on the Welsh side - the tolls, as with the existing bridge, will apply only to westbound traffic. An M4 extension and approach roads to the M5 are being funded by the Department of Transport. The M4 will be re-routed to the new bridge, expected to take 60 per cent of the crossing traffic, and the road via the existing bridge will become the M48.

In the hazardous task of building the new bridge, Laing and GTM have to contend with a tidal range of more than 12 metres, the second highest in the world after the Bay of Fundy, Nova Scotia. "The best-read books here are the tide tables," says Mr Norman Haste, project director. "With a high tidal range you get very strong currents of up to 10 knots. When it is running at that sort of speed, it is virtually impossible to work on the river."

There are other difficulties. The estuary almost dries out at low tide, leaving only a short time for barges to manoeuvre the caissons, which are pre-cast on either shore. There are also tempestuous winds - which regularly cause problems for high-sided vehicles on the existing bridge. In spite of the dangers there have been no fatal accidents so far.

Annual traffic on the existing bridge has tripled to 18m vehicles from the 5m when it opened in 1968. Since Severn River Crossing took over running of the bridge queues have been cut by a combination of the introduction of the way tolls, automatic cash payment and electronic tagging to replace season tickets, and by the impact of the recession.

An undisclosed factor is how many vehicles avoid the tolls by making the long detour through Gloucestershire, and then enjoy a free return trip across the Severn. The RAC argues that high tolls are penalising Welsh small businesses and that there has been a big increase in trucks avoiding the bridge, "with a devastating effect on local communities". It says the bridge is a "prime example to the government of what not to do" when it introduces motorway tolling. Severn River Crossing is confident that for most people time will be more important than money. What the tolls on the new crossing will fail to buy, however, is a good view. To counter the high winds, there will be 3 metre screens on both sides of the bridge.

WE GATHER COMPANY INFORMATION. YOU ENJOY THE FRUITS.

McCarthy Information provides comprehensive information on the companies and industries that interest you. Every day, we harvest and store the information from the world's top 70 business publications.

Whether you access it on CD-ROM, online or from hard copy, you will find it easy to reap the benefits from McCarthy's comprehensive service.

So the first need today: post the coupon below.

Don't be a don't know...

...contact McCarthy

Complete this coupon and send it to: Michael Redgrave, McCarthy Information, P.O. Box 12, Sunbury, Middlesex TW16 7JD. Telephone: 0932 761444. Please send me details of McCarthy Information Services.

Name: _____
Company: _____
Address: _____
Country: _____
Telephone: _____

AFT 18F
McCarthy Information Services
COMPANY INFORMATION TO GET ON

£900m corporate boost for Lloyd's

By Andrew Jack

Lloyd's of London has attracted more than £900m from investors taking advantage of the first chance in the insurance market's 305-year history to be protected by limited liability.

Twenty-five "corporate members" backed by institutional and private money will be able to contribute £1.6bn in capacity for the 1994 underwriting year, Lloyd's said yesterday.

It added that resignations by Names - the individuals whose assets have traditionally supported the market - are expected to be less than half the number this year than last.

The figures suggest that Lloyd's may be able to offer total underwriting capacity for 1994 of £10bn compared with £8.8bn last year. Final numbers will be prepared by the end of next week.

Mr David Rowland, chairman, said corporate capital would allow Lloyd's to take advantage of "greatly improved trading prospects" and enhance the professional standards of the market.

The corporate money has been generated following recommendations in a radical business plan published by Lloyd's last April to introduce corporate capital without the requirement of unlimited liability imposed on individual members in the past. The amount supplied is towards the upper end of Lloyd's estimates of £500m to £1bn.

Under the rules of the scheme, members can underwrite twice the level of capital they hold. Only about £800m of

Who is joining the market?

Quoted investment trusts	Capital raised
London Insurance Market Investment Trust	£280m
CLM Insurance Fund	£80m
Angerstein Underwriting Trust	£57m
HCG Lloyd's Investment Trust	£55m
New London Capital	£50m
Debian Lloyd's Investment Trust	£51m
Mosthead Insurance Underwriting	£40m
Premium Underwriting	£33m
Syndicate Capital Trust	£32m
Finbury Underwriting Investment Trust	£30m
Abstrust Lloyd's Insurance Trust	£30m
Hiscox Select Insurance Fund	£30m

Other Vehicles	Capital raised
Lomond (formerly Murray Underwriting)	£27m
Navigator's Corporate Underwriters	£19.25m
Camperdown Corporation (St Pauls)	£14m
Hiscox Dedicated Corporate Member	£10m
Alcoa Syndicate Investment	£8.5m
Wentworth Underwriting	£5m
Kin Colasworth Corporate Member	£2.25m
Yasuda Lloyd's Corporate Member	£1.5m
MICAL	£1.5m

In addition to these other vehicles, there are four further corporate members which will supply, in aggregate, £13m of capital.

The £900m raised will be pledged in 1994, giving a total underwriting capacity of £1.6bn.

The shortfall reflects money for which there was no room on preferred syndicates, held back for the 1993 year and to pay the management and administration expenses of the corporate vehicles.

The corporate members include 12 quoted investment trusts which have raised a total of £800m in capital, with £280m coming from London Insurance Market Investment Trust (LIM) alone.

Nine private corporate vehicles have raised £87m, with £27m from Lomond, formerly Murray Underwriting, and just £1.5m from each of the two smallest vehicles. Four further corporate members will supply a further £13m. A number of other corporate members were marketed during the autumn but collapsed through lack of support.

Provisional estimates show that just 958 Names have resigned and will not be underwriting in 1994 compared with 2,308 one year ago. This leaves 19,537 active underwriting Names for the year.

The increase in total underwriting capacity reflects a combination of lower resignations, and the introduction of both corporate capital and Members' Agents Pooling Arrangements, which spread the commitments of Names more widely across syndicates.

Sniper rifle is sold in US shops

By Jimmy Burns

One of the weapons which IRA snipers are believed to be using near the border with the Irish Republic - a Barrett Light Fifty rifle - is freely available on the US market at a basic price of $6,750 (£1,560).

The weapon poses a serious tactical challenge to those of the 10,000 security forces personnel in the province who operate in the so-called "bandit country" near the border. Security sources say the killing by a sniper of a British soldier on Thursday has underlined how the IRA use surprise to defy the heavy military presence in the area.

Names such as "black widow" and "Goldfinger" are being bandied about in order to perpetuate the notion of IRA invincibility.

Mr Ian Hogg, editor of Jane's Infantry Weapons, said yesterday that the rifle was used widely by US police and soldiers. The manufacturers claim that it is accurate up to 1,400 yards.

The soldier was the ninth member of the security forces to be killed by a single shot from a sniper since August 1992.

Forensic examinations have established that most of the attacks have involved a large-calibre weapon using an armour-piercing bullet fired at long range. No sniper has been detected by the army's control towers in the border area.

The army and the Royal Ulster Constabulary insist there is no evidence to suggest that all the killings were the work of one person.

Anger spreads in scarred town

The old man in a flat cap sat at the dimly lit bar in the North-ern Ireland town of Enniskillen and muttered angrily: "Forget this peace declaration, those provos are going to come and blow us all up now."

"Hey Jack!" chided his neighbour, looking nervously around the room where both Catholic and Protestant groups were drinking. "Let's talk about the weather instead!"

The disquiet may be expressed in hushed mutters, but there is a palpable sense of disappointment in Enniskillen, the town devastated by an IRA bomb which killed 11 and wounded 63 on Remembrance Sunday in 1987.

For the last three weeks the 11,000-strong population, which is split fairly evenly between Catholic and Protestant, has watched the waiting game being played by the British government and the IRA.

And with Thursday's murder of a British soldier now dominating the local news, attitudes across the town, which sits 15 miles from the border with the Republic, are hardening. Mr Raymond Ferguson, a lawyer and Ulster Unionist party councillor, is already predicting a new onslaught of violence. Although he represents the largest and more moderate of the unionist parties - and accepts last month's Anglo-Irish declaration - he feels increasingly angry.

"The British government has made a huge blunder in being involved in this so-called peace declaration," he said. "They are just boosting the morale of the IRA."

Across the town, activists in Sinn Féin, the political wing of the IRA, are reluctant to talk, even though they once won a by-election in the town and now hold three of the 23 seats in the local council.

Mr Gerry McHugh, a Sinn Féin councillor, said: "The people here don't see much in the Gillian Tett finds a sense of disappointment in Enniskillen at the premiers' peace initiative

Raymond Ferguson: "The British government has made a huge blunder in being involved in this so-called peace declaration" declaration - they're just really confused... with Major saying one thing and Reynolds another."

The comments seem particularly poignant as Enniskillen would seem more prepared for peace than many towns in Ulster. The Remembrance Day bomb prompted a wave of anti-IRA feeling which allowed the Ulster Unionists to gain control of the local parliamentary seat. And on a local level relations between the two communities are not bad. In the centre of the town a Catholic, Protestant and Methodist church stand side by side. Meanwhile, the trauma of the bomb has spawned a clutch of community initiatives to push towards peace.

Mr David Cupples, minister of the Presbyterian Church, believes that most of his congregation are still "hoping against hope" that the peace initiative will be salvaged. But he admits that it will be difficult for many to accept any initiative which appears to reward IRA violence. "The hurts are very deep here," he said.

But after 25 years of continual violence, the danger in a town such as Enniskillen is that terrorist activities already seem normal. Mr Chris Donegan, a senior journalist on a local paper said they breed a mood of cynicism among many. The Impartial Reporter tries to be independent - a tolerance which Mr Donegan demonstrates by pointing to the one Catholic on its staff. But the existence of another, Catholic-dominated newspaper is evidence of the lingering tensions in the town, which for many have become normal.

"It's gone on for 25 years and people feel it could go on for 25 more - there is almost this sense of an acceptable level of violence," he said.

And with most residents agreeing that the media hype that accompanied the declaration did not match attitudes on the ground, Father Patrick McGinn, a Catholic priest, believes the best hope for peace in the new year is for the media comment to subside.

"You can build up a false sense of hope - and a false sense of the divisions here," he said.

"The people in this church and the one across the road are not so far away really. We just need the hope and divisions to be toned down."

Modest growth in accounting predicted

By Andrew Jack

British accountancy firms can expect their performance to increase only very modestly over the coming year, according to a briefing paper from the economics department of Barclays Bank released yesterday.

Growing competition and a stagnant market make the prospects "unpromising" for both larger and smaller firms, the briefing warns.

It estimates that the work performed by accountants declined in 1992 and 1993 back to the level of 1990. It forecasts the profession will only see growth of 2 per cent in 1994.

It highlights the fact that just four of the top 20 firms increased fee income in 1992-93, with audit, tax and consultancy work suffering most.

Fee income and profit margins declined as a result of excess capacity and the growing trend of clients to put work out to tender.

Small and medium-sized firms suffered disproportionately because they are more dependent on audit and tax work and do not have much income from insolvency.

Industry Briefing: Accountancy services. Barclays Bank Economics Department, PO Box 12, 1 Wimpole St, London, EC2M 4JF. Tel: 020 7621 288. Free to business customers; £30 to others.

Better-off more worried about losing their jobs

By David Goodhart, Labour Editor

People in high-risk groups for unemployment, such as young males and council tenants, are less concerned about losing their jobs than those in safer groups such as middle-aged southerners with mortgages.

According to an analysis of MORI interviews with 9,000 adults between April and December, young people aged 18 to 24 are heavily over-represented among the unemployed, forming 34 per cent of the total, but only 20 per cent say they are "very concerned" about being made redundant.

Conversely, the interviews show that 35 to 44-year-olds with housing and child-rearing commitments are considerably less likely to be unemployed, forming only 11 per cent of the total - yet 23 per cent of them are "very concerned" about losing their jobs.

In the south of England, with 34 per cent of the unemployment total, 44 per cent of people said they were worried about unemployment, compared with only 22 per cent in the north, which contributes 31 per cent to the unemployment total.

Council tenants form 42 per cent of the unemployed, but only 15 per cent say they are "very concerned" about losing their jobs. Mortgage payers on the other hand form only 26 per cent of the unemployed but 64 per cent are "very concerned" at being made redundant.

Social classes DE, the semi-skilled and unskilled, form 66 per cent of the unemployed but only 25 per cent fear redundancy. Social class C2, skilled manual workers, form only 16 per cent of the unemployed but 38 per cent are very concerned about job loss.

"What we find in general terms is that fear seems to follow the pattern of employment, rather than unemployment," said Mr Simon Braunholtz of MORI, who carried out the analysis for Industrial Relations Services.

"This suggests that either those in the high risk categories feel it 'couldn't happen to me' or are hardened to the possibility of unemployment by past experience or peer group experience," he said.

For the low-risk groups it is evidently financial commitments which drives their fears, so an upturn in the economy could in theory substantially reduce anxiety without producing any important change in their likelihood of becoming unemployed.

Government seeks to salvage fishing policy

By Alison Meldred

The government is seeking an urgent meeting with the European Commission in the new year to try to salvage its fisheries conservation policy after being forced to suspend its unpopular scheme limiting the three vessels can spend at sea.

Ministers will ask Mr Yannis Paleokrassas, the fisheries commissioner, what alternatives would be acceptable to enable the government to meet its commitment to reduce UK fishing fleet capacity by 19 per cent by the end of 1995.

Government policy has been left in disarray by the High Court decision last month to refer to the European Court a challenge by fishermen to the "days-at-sea" restrictions.

The restrictions had been due to come into force today. But the government, acknowledging that the court's move cast legal doubt on the operation of the scheme, has suspended its introduction until the European Court judgment.

This usually involves a long wait and Britain will be asking the commission to speed things up.

Ministers may also ask the commission to allow a delay in the 1996 deadline for achieving fleet capacity cuts, arguing that their hands are tied by the court case.

The restrictions, the cornerstone of the government's programme, were designed to achieve up to 8.5 per cent of the overall cut, with a £25m decommissioning programme and tighter licensing of vessels accounting for the rest.

Fishermen, jubilant at what they see as a victory over the government, want ministers to adopt their package of "technical" conservation measures instead.

These include larger mesh sizes to allow young fish to escape, and closing some areas to fishing when spawning is taking place.

Mr David Pessel, a Plymouth fisherman and an executive member of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations which brought the High Court action, said such measures, unlike the days at sea limits, "directly aid conservation of fish stocks".

But government scientists doubt they would be enough to cut overfishing of endangered stocks.

The European Commission has also been sceptical about whether such measures are effective in the European-wide effort to reduce capacity.

Ministers are outwardly confident the European Court will back its days-at-sea policy. But Mr Pessel, who helped organise a blockade of Plymouth harbour and a demonstration in London, said: "We believe the days-at-sea issue is stone dead. If they ever did try to resurrect it, we can assure them they'd face the same scenario."

A way out of the government's quandary, hinted at by ministers, would be for the European Commission to adopt EU-wide restrictions on time at sea.

Mr Pessel said: "If it was genuinely enforceable and fair, I don't think anybody could argue against it."

In Telford, it's as easy getting people to work as it is getting people to work.

If you're considering relocating, consider this. In Telford, you'll find a willing, multi-skilled workforce whose primary work won't be played by traffic jams or the '8-24' turning into the '9-25'.

What you will find is a population of young people who have a workforce that's growing at eight times the rate of the national average who can travel into your office or factory unimpeded. Thanks to an internal road system most commuters would give their right wheel for.

We've over 2,000 kilometres of fast, scenic roads and only four sets of traffic lights, not to mention our very own motorway.

Which makes Telford one of the most comfortable drive-aways in the international airports.

But our workforce is a first-class arriving at work, it's even to find the town.

A myriad of companies from around the world mean new working practices and shift patterns (not to mention tomorrow's technology) are the norm in Telford, not the exception.

And you would expect a growing high tech town like Telford to have a thriving training sector.

In fact it has one of the largest Information Technology Centres in the UK, a new multi-million pound university and colleges geared up to provide customised training.

But it's not all work and no play.

Telford has a 450-acre town park (the largest in Europe), swimming pools, golf courses, ski slopes, an athletics track, sports centres, a cinema, bowling alley, ice rink and more besides.

All in all Telford is both commercially and socially a hive of activity, with everything you'd expect to find in a big city.

Except for stressed out people and traffic jams, of course.

Telford. development agency
Call David Rogerson and his team on 0952 293262

FINANCIAL TIMES

Number One Southwark Bridge, London SE1 9HL
Tel: 071-873 3000 Telex: 922186 Fax: 071-407 5700

Weekend January 1/January 2 1994

Bulls, bears and bubbles

The Crash of '94 - the phrase does, you have to admit, have a certain ring about it. The past 12 months have seen stock and bond markets around the world respond with equal euphoria to news both good and bad. Stockbrokers have repeatedly revised upwards their targets for equity markets, then upgraded their corporate earnings forecasts to make sense of the new peaks that they expect the markets to scale. The retail investor is back with a vengeance on both sides of the Atlantic. And the scramble for shares in the City this week was almost as frenetic as the sales in the West End department stores.

When people appear to think that the supply of equities is about to run out, at the end of a month in which Mr Vladimir Zhirinovskiy has talked of deploying Russia's nuclear arsenal, it is clearly time to ask whether the whole financial house is about to come tumbling down.

The one part of the markets' thinking that is hard to argue with at this point concerns the short-term case for bonds. After the inflationary excesses of the 1960s and 1970s, and the financial liberalisation of the 1980s, the world is clearly changing financial year. Disinflation, which is what bond market euphoria is all about, is not merely a reflection of cyclical factors like recession. Apart from Japan, which starts from a position of budgetary strength, the leading industrialised countries have all embarked on varying degrees of fiscal retrenchment.

Equally important, competition from low-wage developing countries is imposing downward pressure on prices in the developed world. In the tradable goods sectors of the G7 nations, the ability of workers to demand increased pay and of companies to increase profit margins is severely constrained. The completion of the Uruguay Round of the Gatt will ensure that the downward pressure on prices of tradable goods will increase rather than decrease over the rest of the decade.

Astonishing fall

These structural changes, taken against the background of a sluggish recovery in which the western economies have been moving in divergent directions, provide the explanation for an astonishing fall in both nominal and real bond yields. Over the past year, if British index-linked gilts are any guide to the global trend (which seems plausible enough in an increasingly global market), real bond yields have fallen by around a full percentage point to just under 3 per cent - a figure that is back in line with the kind of rates that used to prevail in the days of the gold standard.

The story is undoubtedly a good one for bonds. But it is pretty long in the tooth by now, especially in the US. There, economic growth has been relatively strong and the gap between actual and potential output is expected to disappear. That would point to inflationary bottlenecks - and a red alert at the Fed.

Elsewhere, including the UK, the bond market surge probably has further to run. But it is important to remember that inflation has not been abolished - witness Russia's year-on-year inflation of close to 900 per cent. It has only been stopped in countries with credible governments that the markets trust. It remains to be seen whether those like Italy and Belgium, facing great political challenges as well as huge historic burdens of debt, will live up to market expectations. And as the rest of the world outside the US starts to recover, the demand for global capital will increase, which could bring upward pressure on real bond yields.

Depressing influence

The more puzzling part of the market equation concerns equities. Many of the stories that have been good for bonds, such as fiscal retrenchment and the downward pressure on corporate profit margins, ought to have had a depressing influence on equity prices. But not in the event. The simplest explanation is the practical one. When bank deposits yield a zero income in real terms, as in the US, investors respond by stampeding into securities in order to generate higher real returns. The risk with a money-driven market of this kind is that it can lose touch with reality and turn into a bubble.

By historic standards, the yield on equities in the US and Europe is at the very low end of the spectrum. Yet low dividend yields look less frightening when measured against real bond yields. For a tax exempt investor in the UK, a yield of 3.4 per cent, taken together with almost any assumption about economic growth, does not look so demanding against a 2.9 per cent real bond yield. A 2.7 per cent yield in US equities is another matter, especially as the Federal Reserve will probably have to raise short-term interest rates this year to deal with incipient inflationary pressure. This could frighten the former depositors, who have helped create a bubble via mutual fund investment in equities. The worry for European investors is that US capital outflows have now become so important that European equities could be caught in any backwash.

That is not to say that UK equities will not go higher in the New Year. But it does mean that private investors should now be adopting a much more cautious stance.

A prudent year for UK housing

In any sane society, house price inflation would be regarded as particularly malign, since shelter is, after food, the most essential of goods. Equally, falling prices would be viewed with delight. UK nominal house prices fell, on average, by about 15 per cent between mid-1989 and early 1993, while the ratio of house prices to earnings is at levels last seen in 1935. Is joy breaking out? Alas, no.

The reason for the despondency is not hard to find. Houses are not merely nests; they are nest eggs. In the UK, 68 per cent of housing is in owner-occupation. At the end of 1992, net housing wealth was almost a third of the net wealth of the personal sector, even after three years of declining prices. No wonder millions of owner-occupiers pray for the return of house price inflation. Fortunately, they are unlikely to get what they want, at least in the near future.

This sounds hard-hearted, particularly when many still suffer from the new wave of negative equity. Fortunately, even the very modest price increase of 2 per cent estimated by the Halifax Building Society for 1993 has reduced the number of victims quite sharply. Recently, the Bank of England has calculated that negative equity afflicted 1.2m households at the end of the third quarter of 1993, down from 1.8m at the end of the first quarter. The value of negative equity also fell, from £11.7bn to £7.3bn. This suggests that the 5 per cent price increase forecast by the Halifax for 1994 might reduce the numbers affected considerably.

Hapless victims

In any case, these people are the hapless victims, not of the inevitable price adjustment of 1989-92, but of the period beforehand, when house prices rose some two and a half times. The British middle classes had to learn that buying a bigger house than they could afford and borrowing close to 100 per cent of its value was not the best way to become rich. The lesson was brutal, as such lessons tend to be. It fell not on the beneficiaries of house price inflation but on their children. But they at least must have learned their lesson.

Or have they? Within 20 years the UK has had two house price surges, in 1971-74 and again in 1985-88, along with a mini-surge between 1978 and 1980. What is to prevent another one? In the short run, painful memories should do the trick. Over the long term, people must believe that the authorities would not permit another inflationary burst.

Price correction

This confidence will not be easy to sustain, since some price correction is unavoidable after the recent decline. If prices rise faster than nominal interest rates, even cautious buyers may feel forced to jump into the market. As prices rise, negative equity will also diminish quite rapidly. The value of negative equity is, in any case, only about 1 per cent of the net value of the housing stock. Also important will be the combination of low rates of interest on deposits with the rampaging bull market in financial assets. People will seek other investments, with property standing out for its cheapness.

What does this mean for the authorities? It means they should be on their guard. They should become nervous if house prices rise faster than interest rates for a lengthy time. They should feel panic if housing-related credit starts to expand rapidly. And if the next cut in the base rate of interest were to come after this year's round of annual mortgage interest adjustments, they should feel rather pleased.

Window on the world

Many of the predictions made for 1993 proved accurate, if rather safe, bets. Answering the most important questions for this year, FT writers do not expect a great upheaval in global fortunes - but some economic and political changes may be positive

How well did FT writers forecast events in 1993? Quite well, it appears. Martin Wolf decried the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's December 1992 forecast of 2.3 per cent for Japanese economic growth and 1.2 per cent for German growth in 1993. He predicted, instead, that the former would grow very little and the latter contract. Even he was optimistic. He also forecast the collapse of the old European exchange rate mechanism into a narrow D-Mark zone, with floating rates among the leading European currencies. That is what happened, with the ERM reduced to a link between the Netherlands and Germany. His January 1992 forecast that the Uruguay Round would succeed came true, a year late.

Edward Mortimer argued that there would be no peace in the Balkans, but assumed - too optimistically - that "the international community" would never accept a Serb victory de jure. Jurek Martin was bullish on Mr Clinton's ability to get things done, rightly so. Philip Stephens said John Major would still be UK prime minister at the end of 1993, while Lionel Barber assumed the Maastricht treaty would be ratified. As for peace in the Middle East, Hugh Carnegie noted, correctly, that awareness of the narrowing "window of opportunity" might spur a breakthrough.

John Lloyd thought that the Russian economy would get worse; Stephen Fidler that Brazil would remain a country with potential it fails to achieve; and Alexander Nicoll that Chinese economic reform would endure. Safe bets all, they remain so for 1994.

So how will 1994 turn out?

Will markets crash?

John Plender writes: With financial markets still adjusting to powerful disinflationary forces in the global economy, bonds will bubble on and up in the first half of 1994. But not in the US, where recovery is well advanced and the gap between actual and potential output - a key indicator of inflationary pressure - is disappearing. The question for world equity markets is how fiercely the Federal Reserve twitches in response. A big rise in short-term interest rates could precipitate the Crash of '94.

A more likely outcome is a cautious tightening of policy which initially fails to dent the equity euphoria. The bump will then come if and when the Fed's action is perceived as too little, too late. Equities in most markets are expensive by historic standards and will look much cheaper at some point in the next 18 months, even if a few ounces of capital gain remain to be squeezed out in the short term. Best defensive bet: UK commercial property, where yields are still at historically high levels. Wild cards that could bring a premature end to the equity party: Vladimir Zhirinovskiy, Kim Il Sung and their like, who yearn to play with nuclear toys.

Will the ERM be back in narrow bands?

Martin Wolf writes: No, but it should at least be feasible. What destroyed the credibility of the old narrow-band ERM was the inappropriate monetary policies it imposed upon member states. The price paid for that lack of credibility were the high interest rate premiums that had to be paid on weaker currencies. Once the European economy returns to steady growth, which should begin this year, fixed exchange rates should become more defensible once more.

Real short-term interest rates remain quite high in the continent. But the Bundesbank will become increasingly confident that German inflation is on the way down. Given its determination to restore German monetary credibility, it will cut short-term interest rates slowly. But the strength of the disinflationary forces at work in Germany should allow rates to go down a long way. The OECD December forecast that they will be below 4 per cent in 1995 might even be too cautious.

If so, recovery should be well entrenched by late 1994 or early 1995. It would then be possible to move back to narrow bands. But it would be more sensible to retain the present, more flexible system and use it as a jumping off point for economic and monetary union.

Will the EU have more members by next year?

Lionel Barber writes: Yes, but not necessarily as many as first planned. Nor is it certain that Austria, Finland, Norway and Sweden will enter the European Union by the agreed target date of January 1 1995. The enlargement negotiations are proving stickier than first thought, and public opinion in all the candidate countries remains a mixture of equivocal and hostile, with the possible exception of Finland. Any effort to speed up negotiations to meet the March 1 deadline could lead to overhasty concessions and a backlash at home.

Pencil in success for Finland, Austria and Sweden, but it is still not a safe bet that all three will be ready by new year 1995. Norway remains the shakiest candidate, mainly because of its tough demands on oil and fishing.

Who will succeed Delors?

Lionel Barber writes: Mr Ruud Lubbers, the Dutch prime minister, remains front-runner to become European Commission president. He briefly denied he was a candidate last autumn; but his aim was to avoid accusations that his Brussels ambitions were blunting Amsterdam's chances of beating Frankfurt in the race to win the European Monetary Institute.

Mr Lubbers has spent almost 12 years at the top of Dutch politics, he knows his way round the corridors of power in Europe, and it is time that a smaller EU state took the top Commission job, according to Buggins's Turn Rules in Brussels. More important, as a Christian Democrat, Mr Lubbers may also have German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's vote in his pocket.

An upset could come if countries decide they want a more exciting candidate. Sir Leon Brittan, chief EU trade negotiator, is running hard on the basis of the successful conclusion of the Gatt world trade talks; and it would be unwise to rule out Mr Peter Sutherland, a former Irish commissioner and director-general of Gatt.

Other potential contenders include Mr Leo Tindemans, former Belgian prime minister and currently a Euro-MP; Mr Wilfried Martens, another Belgian prime minister; and Mr Willy Claes, who impressed as Belgian foreign minister during the recent Belgian presidency of the EU.

How low will UK base rates go?

Martin Wolf writes: British base rate will trough at 4.4 per cent towards the end of 1994. The further reduction of 1½ percentage points will be justified by continued disinflation and the sluggishness imparted by the £7.9bn in tax increases due in April.

If that were not a good enough reason to lower short-term interest rates, declining European interest rates will help too. With German short-term interest rates continuing to decline, the pound is likely to strengthen against the D-Mark, the last thing Mr Kenneth Clarke will want to see. As the gap between US and European rates of interest shrinks, the dollar is likely to strengthen too, which would also help the UK economy.

Lower base rates may help both the economy and the great British borrowing classes, but they also punish depositors. Higher taxes on those in work, alongside still lower interest rates for those in retirement, will sink the hearts of Tory voters and politicians.

How will the UK Conservative party fare?

Philip Stephens writes: After spending most of 1993 locked in virtual civil war, the Conservative party of government, not opposition. But the lesson of this government has been never to assume the recent past is a guide to the near future. John Major's grip on 10 Downing Street remains far from certain. Kenneth Clarke, the chancellor, is waiting in the wings should the prime minister stumble.

Will the Japanese economy recover?

Robert Thomson writes: Probably not. For the last two years, the Japanese government has predicted that economic recovery is a few months away, but the passing of each month has brought a continuing deterioration in corporate profits. Recovery is still officially a few months away, but bureaucrats at the finance and trade ministries fear that the economy is on the brink of a new downturn, perhaps triggered by workforce reductions. There are positive signs. Housing starts are on the rise and the yen has weakened by 11 per cent since August, when it edged close to ¥100 to the dollar. But the strong yen encouraged fresh investment in Jacques Delors. Goodbye Brussels, hello Paris? The EU president is leaving the Commission, possibly for a stab at the French presidency

Bill Clinton. Is home where his heart is? The US president will do well to keep even half his eclectic mind on domestic matters

Hong Kong. Poles apart: the colony's stock market boomed while London and Beijing squared up for a fight

Fidel Castro. Communism's last stand: the smart money is on the Cuban leader staying put Vladimir Zhirinovskiy. Right out of line: Russia's neo-fascist has done everything wrong since his poll triumph

Former Yugoslavia. Peace? Out of sight

Japan's economy. Out of the woods? Optimists are likely to be disappointed other east Asian countries, where labour costs are lower. The Japan Research Institute estimates that the transfer of production overseas will mean 1.1m fewer jobs within Japan over the next five years.

Bank of Japan officials say the two most important indicators of a recovery will be consumer confidence, weighed down by concerns about job security, and capital investment, shrinking because most manufacturers are attempting to reduce production capacity at home. If the coalition government crumbles and an election produces another unstable alliance, consumer and corporate confidence will be further undermined.

Most private forecasts for the fiscal year beginning in April are rather gloomy. Nomura Research Institute expects the economy to contract by 0.4 per cent. Nippon Life Insurance forecasts zero growth, and the Bank of Tokyo predicts an expansion of 0.4 per cent. To complete the gloomy picture, the Daiwa Research Institute expects corporate profits to fall for a fifth consecutive year.

Will Zhirinovskiy find more success?

John Lloyd writes: This will be a difficult year for Vladimir Zhirinovskiy. Success came rapidly at Russia's December elections, but afterwards he did everything wrong. He posed as a moderate, but slipped and threatened to use nuclear weapons on Japan and Germany. Having insisted he really was a Liberal Democrat, he revealed that his main ally was Dr Gerhardt Frey, leader of the far-right German People's Union. He claimed cabinet posts, then said he would lead the opposition.

Russian politics are messy but have limits: unless he shows some sense of what to do with his victory in the polls - and it was a victory - will fail. However, the disaffection which gave him that victory may find a better vehicle.

Will war end in the former Yugoslavia?

Edward Mortimer writes: An overall peace settlement is unlikely. Although there is great weariness, there are also burning grievances and intense mutual mistrust. Winners (so far) mainly the Serbs) are unwilling to purchase peace by giving up territory gained. Losers (especially the Bosnian government) still see more hope of regaining something by war than by negotiations. As for the "international community", its inability to mediate and unwillingness to impose peace have been amply demonstrated. Serbia would like peace, to get rid of sanctions, but it no longer controls (if it ever did) either the Serbs of Bosnia or those of Croatia. Fighting in Bosnia might gradually wind down, if Moslems have captured as much territory from Croats, and Serbs from Moslems, as they can reasonably hope for. But any truce will be unstable, because the Moslems will not have a viable territory and will be on the look-out for chances to regain some of what they have lost. At worst, Sarajevo may fall to Serbs or be partitioned, with attendant atrocities.

Fighting may resume in Croatia, whose government will want to prevent Serbs from consolidating de facto "independence" in occupied areas. And the fact that war did not break out in Kosovo in 1993 does not mean it will not in 1994.

Will Fidel Castro survive?

Stephen Fidler writes: Probably. Castro's position as Cuban leader has weakened significantly since the loss of Soviet aid. The economy may in 1993 have turned the corner after a severe slump, but not enough to quell popular dissatisfaction over the economic hardship being suffered. The government's grip over the country has also been loosening as it has moved reluctantly to reform its economy. Some of the reforms, in particular the legalisation of the dollar, are accentuating divisions in society.

But it is hard to see how resultant dissatisfaction could develop into a force strong enough to overturn Castro's government, which has been skilful in targeting the internal groups around which opposition could coalesce. And though many Cubans may be disenchanted with Castro, there is widespread dislike of the expatriate opposition groups centred on Miami. Cuban officials have been suggesting one-man rule is giving way to a more collective form of administration. But this will probably make little difference to the US embargo, which - by allowing him to blame Washington for the country's troubles - may be Castro's greatest prop. The betting must be on Castro to remain el lider maximo through 1994.

Will Clinton concentrate on domestic policies?

Jurek Martin writes: Yes and no. Nothing matters to him more than healthcare reform. Universal coverage will not be in place a year from now - even if he had things all his own way, it would not properly kick in until 1996 - but he must have a partial legislative victory in place before November's midterm elections to have a chance of finishing the job in 1995. The battle in Congress could be daunting, especially with Republicans expecting gains in the midterms.

Also on a heavy domestic agenda are education and worker training programmes, welfare reform and that most divisive of political issues, gun control. As last year, he may win more than he loses if he can amass the right coalition again, but healthcare is the "big one", requiring maximum endeavour and with current odds barely in his favour.

That said, Mr Clinton has a Bush-like travel schedule in 1994, after going abroad only twice last year. No fewer than four European trips are planned: in January, to Brussels (for Nato), Prague, Moscow and Minsk, and Geneva (for the Assad of Syria); in June, for the 50th anniversary of the Normandy landings; in July, to Italy for the G7; and in November, to Budapest for the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. He will also attend the next Apec summit in Indonesia at a date still to be fixed. The summit with South American leaders will, at least, be in Washington.

If "being there" is any guide, and with foreign policy problems far more intrinsically important than Haiti and Somalia looming, he will do well to keep even half his eclectic mind on the home hearth.

Will Hong Kong's economy be damaged?

Alexander Nicoll writes: Hong Kong's financial markets appeared in 1993 to be oblivious to the deadlock between Britain and China over electoral reform proposals by Mr Chris Patten, the governor. They are operating as though the territory is already part of China - of which it will be a Special Administrative Region from mid-1997. Logic suggests that China, with an enormous financial stake in Hong Kong's prosperity, will not act to undermine it - but logic may not always overcome the passions which Hong Kong stirs in Beijing.

Although Mr Patten's proposals are now destined for anguished debate in Hong Kong's Legislative Council, it seems likely that the economy will march on for the time being regardless of bitterness between the present and future patrons. If Sino-British talks on the practical details of the handover do not speed up, however, the transition may be bumpy, which could affect the economy.

Whether the economy will be harmed in the longer term by failure to advance democracy depends on whether Mr Patten is right to contend that basic freedoms underpin Hong Kong's economic success. In any case, its economic performance is increasingly bound up with China's, and thus with whether Beijing can slow its own economic boom without resorting to severe austerity measures.

Hopes of glory, fears of blood

As South Africa's elections approach, Patti Waldmeir takes the pulse of supporters of three different camps

South Africa's dissenting tribes: Zulu warriors, the white right-wing AWE and the African National Congress

We could not immediately see Isandlwana, as we bumped along the dirt road, admiring the jagged peaks and vast blue-grey plains of northern Natal, and listening to the great Zulu impi (war party) which spilled so much blood here in 1879. Then we saw them, descendants of the Isandlwana victors, dressed for urban battle. 10,000 Zulus in street clothes, carrying assegais (spears), knobkerries (clubs) and shields, the same weapons which humbled the British empire, used now to spill blood on township battlefields.

Last month, at the site of their people's greatest military victory, Zulus heard King Goodwill Zwelithini bemoan the Zulu nation's darkest hour. Using the imagery of 19th century colonialism, King Goodwill warned of a new invasion of Zululand, not by a mighty foreign monarch, but by fellow Africans - many of them Zulus - from the African National Congress.

The King, flanked by his uncle, Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi, called on them to "let the valour and the honour that led to the defeat of the British in this place in 1879, rise up to claim Zulu warriors". "Resist, I command you, resist! I implore you," he urged the crowd, which radiated menace. "We will not be ruled over by a constitution that we spurn. We will not be subjugated by a political party which wants to destroy us simply because it wants to rule."

Those who underestimate the power of Zulu nationalism - among them, it sometimes seems, the government and the ANC - would have done well to wander among the assegais and the knobkerries at Isandlwana. For these will be the weapons of the forthcoming election campaign, as much as the posters and the TV adverts and the candidates' debates. And these are the people who could stop elections altogether in parts of Natal and the East Rand townships of Johannesburg.

burg, unless they can be persuaded to accept the new constitution. It was a sobering image for 1994. This will be the year of South Africa's greatest glory - the first all-race elections in history, to be held on April 27. But it will probably also be the year of the worst-ever violence, as electoral passion inspires political rivals to new heights of brutality. Since apartheid's death knell was struck in 1990, some 13,000 people have died in political violence. In the latest incident, four people were shot dead and five wounded in a Cape Town bar on Thursday night. It is probably unavoidable that thousands more will perish next year, whatever the electoral outcome.

Yet the ANC dismisses the Isandlwana spirit, convinced that Chief Buthelezi is a paper tiger who will crumble once his KwaZulu black homeland is deprived of both central government funding and the more notorious support which they believe is provided by South Africa's security forces. And the ruling National party, erstwhile ally of the Chief, has thrown in its lot so irrevocably with the ANC that it too seems to downplay his importance. "They are going to share power with the ANC. That's all they care about," said an angry official in Chief Buthelezi's Inkatha Freedom party recently. "They won't let anything else get in the way of that. They want to humiliate us."

In truth, it is easy to offend Zulu pride, especially that of Chief Buthelezi. But after decades spent stoking the fires of Zulu nationalism, he has created a force to be reckoned with - and not, as one government minister suggested after a recent round of talks with Inkatha, by "brute force". Force can deal with the hazy fringes of politics, but not with a party that probably commands a large chunk of support among the 7m Zulus in Natal and elsewhere - not a majority, though polls are unreliable as well as a growing share among whites. South Africans must hope that the new year brings a political settlement with Inkatha; the success of the elections depends on it.

Natal is strewn with battlefields, whether from the last century or the last week; and on the day of the Isandlwana celebrations, South Africa's other great dissenting force, the white right wing, gathered to commemorate another Natal battle. At Blood River, some 40km across the eroded plains of Zululand, rightwing Afrikaners celebrated the quintessential victory of white over black in South Africa, the 1838 triumph of 400-odd Afrikaner voortrekkers (pioneers) over a Zulu force that swells with the telling, but probably totalled 10,000. This was the great victory of right over might, of Christianity over barbarism, of Europe over Africa. For conservative Afrikaner leaders, it has great resonance with the present battle: Afrikaners are vastly outnumbered by blacks; they believe they are fighting for Christian values against communism; and they think they can get God on their side by vowing a new commitment to a Christian lifestyle weakened by intervening decades of affluence and power.

Gen Constand Viljoen, the retired army chief who addressed the volk at Blood River on that day, had planned to make a guest appearance at Isandlwana, to demonstrate the fearful might of a united Boer-

Zulu front. He says practicalities prevented him from doing so, the real reason is probably not that simple. But even if Blood River did not come to Isandlwana, the union of rightwing Afrikaners and Zulus is surely the stuff of peace-loving South Africans' worst nightmares. Few think Inkatha and the rightwing white parties could fight an election campaign together (they recently formed a strategic front, the Freedom Alliance, but share few common policies); but if they choose instead to fight against the poll, unity would be easier and the threat to elections grave indeed. Not surprisingly, much ANC strategic thinking seems to be focused on ways to split the Freedom Alliance, so far without success.

Even on its own, the white right wing poses a grave threat during the campaign. Not that it commands large numbers - the crowd at Blood River was perhaps one-tenth of that at Isandlwana, and its mood was several times less belligerent - but that its members are heavily armed, well trained (by the South African military, which forced all white men to do military service), and experienced in warfare. Last April, it pushed South Africa to the verge of the abyss by arranging the assassination of ANC guerrilla leader, Chris Hani. A few more well-timed murders would seriously jeopardise stability.

Although the ANC despises Inkatha, it openly fears the white right. Here again, divide and conquer seems to capture the essence of ANC strategy: its leaders have been working hard at negotiations with the more moderate faction of the right to give them what they can call an Afrikaner homeland, or volkstaat. This is a bit of semantic chicanery from the ANC, which continues to use the word volkstaat while intending to offer no more than limited local autonomy for Afrikaners - not the independent ethnic state the word would imply. They know they will lose the hard right in the end; but the longer they talk, the less time the right has to mobilise against elections.

Hundreds of miles away in Soweto, on the same December day, Fred Khumalo, an elderly man from Alexandra township, marched proudly in the uniform of the guerrilla army to which he has dedicated his life: Umkhonto we Sizwe, Spear of the Nation, the ANC force. The previous day, at a shebeen (beer hall) in one of Alexandra's desperately poor streets, Mr Khumalo expressed his fears about the ANC "self-defence units" in the township, to one of which he belongs. Criminal elements had infiltrated the SDUs, and some had run out of control. Some SDUs were working closely with police; but others were a threat to peace in a township that has struggled back from the brink of anarchy to something like calm.

Elections will provide renegade SDUs with the ideal atmosphere for mayhem. In many areas, they will prevent campaigning by rival parties altogether, in the disadvantage of parties such as the National party and the liberal Democratic party, which need to extend their support base to black if they are to survive in the new South Africa. Perhaps Mr Khumalo should be given the last word in this survey of gloom, from Isandlwana to Alexandra via Blood River. "I have no bitterness, I don't hate whites," he told me, with emotion in his voice and a pleading sincerity in his eyes. He said how much he was looking forward to the elections. Even if they are only partly free and fair, they will mark a great day for South Africa. Black South Africans have waited centuries for this.

John Authers on the UK government's plans for selective education

In a class of their own

Are grammar schools on their way back? Selective education received its strongest backing for a quarter of a century this week when the UK government announced it would provide funds for schools which may be wholly or partially selective.

In the clearest extension of the government's policy of fostering choice and diversity in education, the Funding Agency for Schools, a government quango, will also be given the power to create schools in areas where there is a shortage of places.

offer few clues as the intake of selective schools gives them an in-built advantage.

However, studies into the "value added" by schools - the degree to which pupils improve during their time at a school - suggest selectivity makes little difference. For example, the Audit Commission's study on "value added" in A-level results found "no single type of institution appears consistently more effective at A-level than others".

Surviving grammar schools perform well, but analysis of High Wycombe, Buckinghamshire, home to three of the nation's top grammar schools, indicates their success is grounded in local authority control, rather than competition.

The proposals elicited condemnation from the Labour party and from teachers' unions. Mrs Anna Taylor, the shadow education secretary, described selective education as favouring "the very few at the expense of the vast majority", while Mr Don Foster, her Liberal Democrat counterpart, said: "The measure will increase chaos and division."

Mr Doug McAvoy, general secretary of the National Union of Teachers, said: "The plans will create an elite education for a limited number of pupils. This is not the way to have high-quality education for all of our children."

The proposals probably mean the end of the "neighbourhood comprehensive" which now dominates secondary education. But the UK is unlikely to see a return to the system of grammar schools, secondary moderns, and technical schools, with admissions decided by exams taken at the age of 11, mapped out in the 1944 Education Act.

Instead, the "big idea" of Mr John Patten, the education secretary, is to allow a school system to emerge in response to local demands. But will the reforms create coherent and diverse schooling or a patchwork of provision?

Already, schools and local authorities which dislike the comprehensive system can reject it. More than 1,000 schools have opted out of local authority control in favour of accepting direct grants from the government. This is far fewer than the government hoped - it aimed for 1,500 by April this year - but enough to set a trend.

If a comprehensive school opts out, Mr Patten can allow it to become selective. Or it can choose to become a specialist "technology college" and receive extra funding. Schools may now select up to 10 per cent of their intake on the basis of particular skills - including technology, sport, music and drama.

Wandsworth, the Conservative-controlled London borough, shows the scope schools have to shift from the comprehensive model. By last September, all but four of its secondary schools had opted out.

Of the remainder, Battersea school is now a technology college; Ernest Bevin, a purpose-built "boys' comprehensive", wants to admit half its pupils on the basis of academic selection; and Chestnut Grove comprehensive will admit 30 out of its annual intake of 150 on the basis of aptitude for art and design, and another 30 on linguistic ability. Two grant-maintained schools, Burntwood, which is girls-only, and Wavensay, which is mixed, are consulting the government about admitting roughly half their intake by selection.

If Wandsworth's proposals are passed, only one local authority comprehensive will be left in the borough. Admissions will be in the hands of the schools, not the council.

The pattern in the rest of the country is less clear, although in Penarth, Cumbria, Mr Patten has shown he wants to encourage selective schools where there is minimal local support.

Last year, he allowed one opted-out school to become a grammar school although the plan was opposed by the head of the town's remaining comprehensive, and despite keen opposition from some teachers, councillors and parents. The result is that both schools are competing fiercely for the most able pupils, and their development strategies are in disarray.

Such confusion raises the deeper question of whether selectivity is the right direction for UK education. Direct comparisons between the results achieved by selective schools and comprehensives are difficult. The process differs deeply from the brave new design emerging in Wandsworth. It is mistaken, therefore, to see the latest reforms as a nationwide return to the postwar system. The changes are not taking education back, but forward into uncharted territory.

Big obstacles remain. Opposition to the government may derail the proposals. Head teachers may not support them, and local communities may not want to set up selective schools. The pupils whose needs are not now being met may find no improvement in the new system. The power to make the changes rests with Mr Patten. His decisions will have far-reaching consequences for children across the UK.

This is the story of two small UK investors. Mr Bold started 1993 by moving his funds into a mixture of equities and gilts; he earned a return of about 22.28 per cent.

Mr Cogan kept his money where it had always been - in the building society. He earned about 5.54 per cent gross.

Wiser to be bold

Philip Coggan with a cautionary tale of how small investors fared in 1993

UNIT TRUST NET INVESTMENTS (£m)
1987	6,330.3
1988	1,795.3
1989	3,668.3
1990	391.6
1991	2,769.0
1992	1,649.9
1993	2,180.0*

*To end November. Source: Association of Unit Trusters and Investment Funds

So it would be a mistake to think that all British investors will look back at 1993 with satisfaction. Attitudes will depend on the risks they were prepared to take, and the advice they received at the start of the year.

The past three years have proved a shock for British savers. In 1990, interest rates were 15 per cent and it was both easy and profitable to leave money on deposit. In retrospect, the best time to move out of cash and into shares, or government bonds (gilts), was after Saddam Hussein's invasion of Kuwait in August 1990 when the stock market dropped sharply. But few had the nerve, or the incentive, to do so.

Interest rates fell steadily over the next two years, but the most dramatic falls followed sterling's departure from the exchange rate mechanism of the European Monetary System in September 1992. Since then, rates have almost halved, and now languish at 5.5 per cent.

People living off their savings may thus have seen their income fall by more than 60 per cent in the past three years. Economists may argue that "real" interest rates (rates minus the increase in the retail price index) are still positive. But this cuts little ice with savers: their nominal income has been falling, while prices have continued to rise.

It takes time, however, for most savers to react to falling interest rates. In part, this is because few are aware of the rates they receive on their accounts: surveys show that many overestimate returns. Only when the annual interest payment is added to their account does the message sink in.

Not until the start of last year did savers begin to take action to counteract the decline in interest rates. The trend is clear from sales of unit trusts (collective funds which offer investors a spread of equities, or bonds). In December 1992, the unit trust industry made net repurchases from investors of £21.2m. But in January 1993, the trend switched, with net sales of £509m. In the 11 months to the end of last November, net sales were £8.2bn, making 1993 the industry's best.

The key to the success of unit trusts has been the Personal Equity Plan. Income and capital gains made from a Pep are free of tax. But for investors holding shares directly, additional charges imposed by a Pep manager can often wipe out the tax benefits completely, especially after the change in the March Budget change, which reduced the tax credit on dividends from 25 to 20 per cent.

The vast majority of unit trusts impose no additional Pep charge. Thus, if savers buy a unit trust, they might as well do so in a tax-free Pep. Unit trusts now dominate Pep sales.

The surge in unit trust sales is linked to low interest rates. The after-tax return of a cash account to a basic rate taxpayer is currently 4.125 per cent. This is not too far ahead of the dividend yield on the FT-A All-Share Index of 3.4 per cent, which the investor can receive tax-free in a Pep. Investors will therefore lose little income by buying a Pep and have the hope of capital gains.

Further, the unit trust industry has done its best to offer yields well above even the best returns from building society accounts. Probably the most successful product this year has been the Hypo F&C Higher Income Plan, which pays a tax-free income of 10 per cent a year when held in Pep form. The structure of the plan has led some critics to question whether an investor's capital could be eroded in the long run. But enough savers were persuaded of its merits for Hypo F&C to attract £450m last year.

A host of other high-income plans were Commodity's high status in a changing industry

From Mr J M Hobbs.

Sir, As someone who has spent almost 40 years in and around the plantation industry, I was greatly interested in your article about the changes which have occurred during that period ("There was some corner of a foreign field", December 30).

Although I have been much involved with palm oil, and to some extent concerned in the fortunes of tea, coffee, cocoa, and coconut, my first loyalty was always to King Rubber, and it is to this fascinating commodity that I have returned in my later business years. Its status as an industrial commodity today is high, and the services performed by the world markets in ensuring its successful carriage from its tropical home to its manifold consumers are very important. So I make no apology in reminding your readers that behind any growers' association there must be an efficient means of distribution.

This close connection between the agricultural and the marketing sides is, in the case of natural rubber, of long standing, and dates back to 1913, when the Rubber Growers' Association was a founder member of our predecessor, the Rubber Trade Association of London. It is therefore a source of pleasure that the Tropical Growers' Association is planning to join us once more in our offices here, and we should not want it to be felt that, on its journey from "Dickensian offices above a Chinese restaurant" to "cheaper premises in Barking", it is descending into a subterranean world where its presence will be inappropriate.

It should perhaps be mentioned that our association's current chairman is Peter Hadley-Chaplin, son of Edwin Hadley-Chaplin, a former chairman of the TGA, which surely demonstrates that the bonds between ourselves and the growers remain strong.

J M Hobbs, executive director, The Association of the International Rubber Trade, Wingham House, 1st Floor, 16-30 Woking Road, Barking, IG11 5PG

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Number One Southwark Bridge, London SE1 9HL
Fax 071 873 5938. Letters transmitted should be clearly typed and not hand written. Please set fax for finest resolution

Leave job creation and growth in Europe to the entrepreneurs

From Mr Herbert E Meyer.

Sir, With so many "action plans" for European economic growth now on the table, permit me to offer my own. The three-step "Meyer plan" is easy to organise, simple to administer and guaranteed to succeed.

Step One: organise a conference and invite every unselected official who has proposed a growth plan or thrown his weight behind such a plan.

Step Two: Shoot them all.

Step Three: Repeat steps one and two as often as necessary to allow Europe's entrepreneurs the freedom they need to create jobs.

Seriously, what is with you people? The wealth of Europe's great civilisations was not created by bureaucrats armed with grandiose and expensive growth plans. It was created by ambitious, clever, hard-working people who had the grit and the guts to turn ideas and dreams into marketable products and services, thus creating industries and millions of jobs. Europe continues to produce such men - and women - in abundance. Indeed, I meet them all the time. Unfortunately for Europe, I meet them in California or elsewhere in the US where they have settled to work in a country that - despite its current leadership - continues to provide a better political environment in which to achieve commercial success than is available anywhere else in the industrialised world.

For heaven's sake, we are at the end of the 20th century and we know the proper role for government in creating economic growth: it is to establish ground rules, to ensure these rules are obeyed, and otherwise to get the hell out of the way while entrepreneurs make growth happen.

This works all the time: nothing else has ever worked. Why not give this approach a try? More accurately, why not try this approach again, since the last time Europe let its entrepreneurs run free they made it the world's most powerful civilisation, as well as its richest in terms of both material wealth and culture? Isn't this what you want? Or is all this talk of growth merely a cover story, designed to persuade people that something is being done while the real goal - feathering the bureaucrats' nests - continues unabated?

Herbert E Meyer, chairman, Real World Intelligence Inc, PO Box 3089, Friday Harbour, WA 98250, US

'Art' that is a deception

From Ms Alison Bailey.

Sir, I disagree with Nigel Andrews' assessment ("Feel-good movies give way to darker themes", December 30) of Jane Campion's film, The Piano, as a "feminist" film. I advise women not to see it.

A film which dresses up voyeurism with costumes, clever camera work and nice music and presents it as "art" on the back of Victorian modesty is a deception. A nasty amputation scene which offends feminine feelings is horror tactics dressed up as meaning. I walked out of it.

This is the same macho nonsense but more insidious because it is good to look at and to listen to, most of the time.

Alison Bailey, 63 Chelsea Gardens, Chelsea Bridge Road, London SW1

From Mr J M Hobbs.

Sir, As someone who has spent almost 40 years in and around the plantation industry, I was greatly interested in your article about the changes which have occurred during that period ("There was some corner of a foreign field", December 30).

From Mr Herbert E Meyer.

Sir, With so many "action plans" for European economic growth now on the table, permit me to offer my own. The three-step "Meyer plan" is easy to organise, simple to administer and guaranteed to succeed.

From Ms Alison Bailey.

Sir, I disagree with Nigel Andrews' assessment ("Feel-good movies give way to darker themes", December 30) of Jane Campion's film, The Piano, as a "feminist" film. I advise women not to see it.

From Mr J M Hobbs.

Sir, As someone who has spent almost 40 years in and around the plantation industry, I was greatly interested in your article about the changes which have occurred during that period ("There was some corner of a foreign field", December 30).

Right way to run a lottery and the premium bonds

From Sir Sigmund Sternberg.

Sir, The answer must be Yes to your question "Would Britain's national lottery raise more money for good causes if it gave its profits to charities rather than to shareholders?" (leading article, December 20).

The lottery will achieve greater popularity if, like almost every other lottery in the world, it is seen to run entirely for the benefit of the community. The lottery should be run to provide maximum money for good causes, rather than to line the pockets of the companies selected to operate the events. Should Lord Young and Richard Branson be the successful bidders, their business achievement and that of their colleagues is a guarantee that it will be run professionally.

If their bid is not selected, opportunity should be given to another group offering non-profit-making services.

Sigmund Sternberg, Iqps, Hyde House, The Hyde, Edgware Road, London NW9 6LH

From R L Webb.

Sir, Am I alone in feeling that the decision to change the premium bond prize structure is likely to be counter-productive ("Top bond prize will rise to £1m", December 17). Certainly my reason for holding premium bonds is so that I have some chance of winning an amount of cash which, while it will not dramatically change my life, would be sufficient to improve the lifestyle of my family.

As far as I am concerned National Savings should increase the number of £100,000 and £50,000 prizes rather than reduce them in order to produce a "millionaire" winner as a marketing gimmick to compete with the pools and the national lottery. Surely National Savings could fund a "unique selling point" which would attract people such as myself who, strangely enough, do not want to be millionaires.

R L Webb, Woodfield Side, The North, Monmouth, Gwent NP5 4QN

COMPANY NEWS: UK

Oil services company agrees merger with US cable TV group

A change of channel for Flextech

By Raymond Snoddy

Mr Roger Luard, managing director of Flextech, which yesterday announced agreement to merge with the European programme interests of TCI, the US cable television giant, is the first to admit that he is no media mogul.

When the substantive talks were over with Mr Fred Vierra, executive vice president of TCI - itself in the midst of a multi-billion dollar merger deal with Bell Atlantic, the US telephone company - Mr Vierra hopped on a corporate jet to return to Denver.

Mr Luard, a 45-year former Price Waterhouse accountant, jumped on the train to Gloucestershire and treated himself to a burger on the way home. The Flextech managing director will have under his wing stakes in cable and satellite channels as diverse as Bravo, the old movies channel, Children's Channel, UK Gold - the channel based on the programme libraries of the BBC and Thames Television - and UK Living.

Yet four years ago Flextech was an oil services company and Mr Luard had no experience in the media at all.

"Business is business. What is this mystique about the media? You control costs and you control margins," says Mr Luard, who began a deal-making career in 1980 with the £20,000 purchase of a Somerset textile company.

The deal was a good one, and unused land was sold for £500,000 and Mr Luard moved on to other deals - some more successful than others - buying boiler and engineering companies before. In 1990, being asked to look at Flextech, an oil investment company whose assets included Expro, a loss-making oil services company.

Mr Luard said yesterday that over three years a £2m a year Expro loss was turned into a profit of more than £8m. "We had always flagged that we wanted to move into something else. We did not want to be a hostage to the price of oil."

The something else turned out to be the media, which Mr Luard says "has to be a great business" because he believes there is no reason why the UK should be any different from the US and other parts of the US in embracing multi-channel choice.

Flextech's existing media interests include a 24 per cent stake in Hit Entertainment, a successful distributor of children's and nature programming, 60.1 per cent of The Children's Channel, 39 per cent of The Family Channel and a stake in IVS, a company which owns five cable television franchises in the UK covering 285,000 homes.

Under the new deal, Flextech will acquire all the European programme assets of United Artists European Holdings, a wholly-owned subsidiary of TCI. The assets are made up of 100 per cent of Bravo, an additional 24.5 per cent of The Children's Channel, 31.3 per cent of UK Gold, and £44m nominal value loan stock associated with the stakes.

There is also a 100 per cent stake in United Artists Entertainment Programming, a wholly-owned subsidiary of UAEP.

UAEP manages Discovery, the factual channel, The Learning Channel, The Parliament Channel and Wire TV, a service exclusive to cable which mixes soaps, games shows, sport and live studio discussions. The subsidiary is also responsible for the sales and marketing of The Country Music Channel.

The Flextech deal will not result in management changes at UAEP and Ms Joyce Taylor, chief executive, and Mr Mark Luis, chief financial officer, will form the senior management team of Flextech as chief executive of programming and chief financial officer.

In return, TCI takes a 60.4 per cent stake in Flextech -

62.2 per cent if all financing options are exercised. The TCI stake in Flextech, an Unlisted Securities Market company is valued at just over £20m.

In addition TCI will provide £12.5m in cash and a £10m loan in working capital. There are also agreements on a further £14m in shares and unsecured loan stock.

"It's a very good deal for TCI and for Flextech," said Mr Anthony Fry of NM Rothschild, which represented Flextech.

For TCI the deal provides a more European vehicle for future programme expansion at a time when European ownership and content of cable and satellite channels is becoming an increasing political issue. It also offers a quick valuation for channels that are all still loss-making.

Shareholders, upon whose approval the deal is conditional, were warned yesterday that the performance of the company was very dependent on the future development of cable and satellite. There would be no dividends at least until 1995.

TCI will have three members of the eight-strong board. Mr Adam Singer, vice president international of TCI will become an executive director. Mr Vierra and Mr Stephen Brett, senior vice president, will become non-executive directors.

"This is a most wonderful platform to do other things," said Mr Luard, who retains 600,000 Flextech share options at 92p. When the share price was suspended because of the deal it stood at 379p.

£1m income boost for Warburg director

By Catherine Milton

A vice-chairman of SG Warburg Group, the UK-based investment bank, added almost £1m to his income for 1993 after the exercise of options and the sale of bonus shares which together released £981,640.

Mr Michael Gore was assigned to Tokyo as head of the Asia Pacific region earlier this year. The appointment surprised the City because Mr Gore had been the group's finance director since 1986.

Mr Gore joined Warburg in 1964 and is one of the group's three vice-chairmen.

The company told the stock exchange yesterday that Mr Gore executed his rights under the SG Warburg Group Executive Share Option Scheme over 33,558 shares of 25p each on December 29.

The rights were granted in April 1987 at a price of 344.8p.

Also on Wednesday, Mr Gore alerted trustees of the SG Warburg Group Employee Trust of his wish to acquire 67,987 shares in the group.

Under the terms of the SG Warburg Group bonus scheme, shares may be acquired by executives as part of a performance-related pay package.

The shares were acquired at the closing mid-price of 943.5p per share on Wednesday. The total of 101,545 shares were sold at 947p on December 30.

Resort accounts delayed by valuation difficulties

By Catherine Milton

Difficulties in finalising property valuations for Resort Hotels, the company which called in independent accountants to investigate financing issues last July, are behind the long delay in publishing its accounts for the year to end-April.

"Because it has not been possible to determine the finalised valuation of our properties as yet, the accounts of the company for the year ended April 30 1993 are not complete and cannot be laid before you today," Mr David Tonkinson, chairman, told shareholders at yesterday's annual meeting.

Property valuations have become a vexed issue since two firms of chartered surveyors offered widely divergent valuations of the assets of Queens

Most Houses, the troubled hotels company.

There has been speculation that Resort could be suffering similar problems to those at Queens Most Houses of high debt and falling asset value.

Mr Tonkinson said stock exchange rules prevented him from giving shareholders at the meeting any more information about the affairs of the company, whose shares were suspended last July at 45p, without issuing a circular to all shareholders. That had not been possible.

Mr Tonkinson denied that the company had selected the date and venue for its annual meeting to cause shareholders inconvenience.

He said the meeting was timed for the last day of the calendar year "to leave, until the last possible moment, the opportunity of sending a detailed circular to shareholders, if that had been possible."

He added that the meeting was not taking place in one of the company's hotels as these were all "very busy preparing for tonight's festivities with a view to earning profit".

He said the trade and industry department had granted a new deadline of February 28 for publication of the accounts.

Mr Tonkinson added: "The most rigorous investigations have been carried out, both by Ernst & Young as external independent accountants and by our own auditors and solicitors, Coopers & Lybrand and Goudens respectively."

In early December the company's deputy chairman, Mr Tim Barker, and its financial adviser, Barclays de Zoete Wedd, resigned.

1993 proves a five-year high with £5.1bn raised through flotations

The transformation of the new issue market over the past 12 months took the City of London by surprise.

At this time last year financiers were worried that the continuing recession and what looked to be high government borrowing would leave room for only a handful of companies to seek a public listing.

In the event, the year's 165 flotations - a five-year high - raising £5.1bn in new capital assuaged these fears but created their own difficulties. There have been doubts about the quality of some stocks as the high stock market became a more lucrative option than trade sales.

Also, investors have become highly selective with the result that some stocks failed to gain support for their issue prices in early trading.

FLOTATIONS 1993

Company	Sector	Flotation date	Flotation price (£m)	Market value (£m)	First full day's trading share price at close	1993 close	1993 market value (£m)
Abacus Group	Electronics	Nov 8	140p	40.58	153p	169p	49.33
Abstract Lloyds Inv. Trst	Investment Trusts	Nov 24	100p	30.00	98p	94p	28.20
Alders	Stores	Nov 10	170p	174.90	184p	204p	209.88
Anagen	Health/Household	Jun 24	100p	46.50	91p	81p	37.67
Angerstein Underwrit. Trst	Ins Lloyds	Nov 28	100p	67.50	82p	108p	72.90
Arcus	Building Materials	Mar 28	20p	7.22	21p	21p	7.58
Arden Group	Electronics	Nov 26	250p	50.24	240p	285p	57.88
Asda Group	Transport	Nov 28	115p	98.30	115p	120p	104.48
Bakyrchik Gold	Mines	Aug 9	125p	18.75	149p	329p	48.35
Biotrace International	Health/Household	Nov 25	130p	40.05	145p	149p	48.21
Bruntcliffe Aggregates	Other Industrials	May 5	25p	6.23	29p	39p	20.88
BSM Group	Business Services	Oct 27	170p	47.40	174p	189p	48.00
Business Post Group	Business Services	Jul 8	133p	80.00	133p	110p	58.00
Canadian Pizza	Food Manufact	Nov 19	200p	34.47	199p	188p	33.43
Cantham Pharmaceuticals	Health/Household	Oct 26	48p	45.25	48p	41p	40.33
Capelwright	Stores	Jun 23	148p	113.66	165.5p	282p	201.22
Calltech Group	Health/Household	Dec 9	220p	178.45	230p	224p	158.10
Celast International	Health/Household	Jul 8	100p	90.00	101p	103p	81.80
Cenigold	Media	Oct 28	125p	50.29	187p	169p	65.87
Charles Sidney	Motors	Nov 10	110p	25.00	110p	113p	25.95
Chiefsfield	Property	Dec 21	155p	1212.46	180p	182p	1423.67
CLM Inv. Fund	Investment Trust	Nov 19	100p	86.21	98.5p	106p	91.39
Conrad Cavendish Group	Health/Household	Jul 13	225p	50.58	207p	227p	51.03
Crabtree Group	Engineering (Gen)	Jun 22	150p	22.20	204p	271p	40.11
Crest Packaging	Pack/Paper/Print	Nov 4	135p	54.00	140p	177p	54.80
Crociada	Hotels & Leisure	Sep 9	90p	89.98	90p	139p	137.94
David Brown Group	Engineering (Gen)	Apr 15	170p	90.27	207p	248p	140.35
David Lloyd Leisure	Hotels & Leisure	Mar 19	150p	70.39	180p	214p	98.48
Devro International	Food Manufact	Jun 30	170p	224.01	193p	249p	328.11
DPS Furniture	Stores	Nov 25	260p	271.08	271p	319p	333.82
Orion Motors	Motors	May 25	105p	11.84	114p	159p	18.70
Orion Scientific	Health/Household	May 24	105p	25.20	180p	205p	15.12
Enviroform	Health/Household	Jun 28	110p	15.83	118p	131p	18.70
Fenchurch Group	Ins Brokers	Nov 26	180p	63.00	178p	179p	64.05
Field Group	Pack/Paper/Print	Jul 7	250p	148.42	279p	305p	178.11
Fin Decor	Miscellaneous	Jun 16	100p	12.48	253p	267p	33.32
Firebury Underwrit	Ins Brokers	Nov 15	100p	30.00	107p	109p	32.70
Flying Flowers	Stores	Aug 2	65p	4.08	76p	103p	15.26
Gartree	Investment Trust	Nov 11	168p	338.80	179p	205p	413.17
Hambros Investment Services	Other Financial	Mar 30	138p	86.74	144p	105p	85.99
Harriet Group	Textiles	Oct 11	130p	38.78	139p	154p	45.98
Hiscox Select Inv. Fund	Ins Composite	Nov 11	100p	30.00	110p	109p	32.70
Holiday Chemical Holdings	Chemicals	Apr 6	195p	160.68	213p	156p	131.29
Hotels Group	Miscellaneous	Nov 25	250p	59.47	250p	249p	59.24
Independent Insurance Grp	Ins Composite	Nov 25	225p	98.50	225p	284p	95.57
Inveresk	Pack/Paper/Print	Jun 2	150p	78.94	172p	183p	95.15
Liliput Group	Miscellaneous	Nov 25	135p	31.41	125p	115p	26.78
Litho Supplies	Pack/Paper/Print	Nov 22	190p	50.04	192p	236p	62.30
London Industrial	Property	Dec 15	320p	29.29	338p	354p	32.41
Methwood	Ins Composite	Nov 23	100p	40.25	97.5p	106p	43.07
Metrobank	Other Industrials	Jun 28	108p	28.04	135p	119p	28.69
Motor World Group	Motors	Feb 11	210p	27.67	275p	243p	45.19
Nelson Hunt	Ins Broker	Dec 16	140p	63.25	145p	148p	68.90
New London Capital	Ins Lloyds	Nov 22	100p	80.00	98p	99p	59.40
Northern Ireland Elec PP	Electricity	Jun 21	100p	184.50	128.5p	287p	444.42
OGG International	Oil & Gas	May 31	130p	78.00	130p	142p	85.20
On Demand Information	Miscellaneous	Dec 2	78p	38.78	117p	113p	57.11
Orion Leisure	Hotels & Leisure	Oct 11	120p	11.29	128p	139p	13.19
Phoneline	Electronics	May 31	155p	54.99	155p	384p	129.15
Policy Portfolio	Other Financial	Jul 7	130p	10.40	140p	105p	8.48
Premium Trust	Investment Trusts	Dec 10	97p	19.21	84p	99p	18.40
Premium Underwriting	Ins Lloyds	Dec 10	107p	14.12	106p	122p	18.10
Quadrastock	Engineering (Gen)	Jul 20	123p	36.37	128p	180p	53.22
Quality Software Products	Software	Mar 30	385p	29.94	537p	405p	35.57
Quysle Munro	Other Financial	Jul 11	118p	4.74	118p	158p	6.35
Regent Inns	Brewers	Apr 29	135p	13.19	151p	214p	31.36
RJB Mining	Other Industrials	Jun 7	250p	102.75	234p	321p	130.29
Rosemont	Dec 23	11p	0.00	11p	11p	11p	0.00
Roxboro Group	Electronics	Nov 8	230p	80.53	250p	284p	86.44
Royal Doulton	Health/Household	Dec 2	193p	105.98	207p	228p	125.75
RPG Group	Pack/Paper/Print	May 28	125p	74.95	159p	173p	103.73
Rubelord	Building Materials	Nov 25	150p	72.34	163.00p	177p	85.35
Scotia Holdings	Health/Household	Oct 25	290p	180.81	316p	285p	177.69
Seaford End	Dec 22	80p	9.09	60p	61p	9.24
Shandwick Inc	Other Financial	Jul 30	250p	42.13	288p	402p	68.25
Shield Diagnostics	Health/Household	Sep 23	112p	20.62	116p	78p	14.50
Stagecoach Holdings	Transport	Apr 27	112p	134.40	124p	169p	204.83
Syndicate Capital Trst	Ins Lloyds	Nov 25	100p	32.41	93p	98p	31.11
Telepac	Electronics	Dec 9	180p	50.74	181p	192p	60.89
Thy Law	Other Financial	Nov 11	190p	28.88	195p	204p	31.11
Trio Holdings	Other Financial	Jan 12	50p	27.80	54p	61p	33.82
VHE Holdings	Contracting	Sep 20	115p	36.92	118p	119p	37.88
Virtuality Group	Electronics	Oct 19	170p	44.43	289p	331p	66.51
Westminster Health Care	Health/Household	Apr 15	280p	132.80	287p	338p	172.38

*30/12/93 market value. PP: Part paid.

Danka expands in US

Danka Business Systems, the acquisitive office equipment supplier based in the US and quoted in London, has expanded its operations in the Chicago, Illinois, area via the acquisition of American Office Equipment Company for a maximum $9.5m ($5.25m).

AOE, an authorised copier dealer for Sharp, Ricoh and Mita, has 11 branches throughout the Chicago metropolitan area and in northern Indiana, and represented, said Mr Daniel Doyle, Danka chief executive officer, his company's entry into the copier market in that region.

He added that the acquisition would serve as a new base of operations in the US Midwest.

In its most recent financial year, AOE had sales of $32m, operating profits of $1m and net assets of $2m. The purchase price comprises $8.3m cash and a contingent consideration of up to $1m dependent on future earnings.

In the six months to September 30, pre-tax profits at Danka soared 91 per cent to £13.3m on the back of exchange rates and a series of acquisitions.

During the half, it spent some £36m on 13 companies, including its first in the UK.

In October Danka made an

New chairman at Wedgwood

Mr Anthony JF O'Reilly has been appointed non-executive chairman of Wedgwood. Mr Donald P Brennan, who has been appointed deputy chairman.

Also Mr Robert H Niehaus has been appointed to the board of Wedgwood Wedgwood UK and succeeds Mr O'Reilly as non-executive chairman of that company.

Thornton £3m zero prof placing Thornton Pan-European Investment Trust is to raise some £3m net of expenses via a placing of zero dividend preference shares at 50p apiece.

It is also proposed that the life of the company be extended by about eight years to October 31 2001.

The new shares have been placed with institutions, subject to a clawback by qualifying shareholders on the basis of one new preference share for every three ordinary held.

The zero dividend preference shares are designed to offer investors a return of 80.83p each on the new winding up date, which represents a gross redemption yield of 9 per cent on the subscription price.

Following the introduction of zero dividend preference shares, the existing ordinary shares are to be redesignated as ordinary income shares.

NEWS DIGEST

For shareholders who wish to realise their investment in the company, Olliff & Partners, adviser to the proposals, is making a cash offer which amounts to 101 per cent of formula asset value.

Scottish Heritable wins US judgment

Scottish Heritable Trust, the mini-conglomerate, has won an $8.5m ($5.7m) judgment in the US courts in respect of a claim against KPMG Peat Marwick regarding the acquisition of a 50 per cent stake in Rangaire Corporation in 1988.

The Federal Court jury in Dallas, Texas, found in favour of the company after a trial lasting four weeks. The claim filed by SHT alleged that audited financial statements of Rangaire, upon which the company made its decision to purchase a stake, were materially mis-stated.

The jury found that the auditors had not committed fraudulent violation of US securities laws, but had been negligent in its audits of Rangaire in 1987 and 1988.

The timing of the receipt of the award is dependent on whether or not an appeal is made. SHT anticipates that it will realise about $3.5m after expenses.

Refinancing talks with its bankers are continuing and a further announcement will be made early in 1994. As a result of these talks, it has been decided to change the company's year end to March 31.

British Polythene shifts Alida assets

The tangible fixed assets and investments of British Polythene Industries' wholly owned subsidiary, Alida Holdings, have been transferred to other companies within the group.

Alida has an outstanding listed security of 1.6m 9.25 per cent redeem

Euro Disney shares fall after threat of closure

By Alice Rawsthorn in Paris

Euro Disney, the struggling leisure group, yesterday saw its shares fall sharply after Mr Michael Eisner, chairman of Walt Disney, its US parent company, confirmed that the Euro Disneyland theme park may close unless Euro Disney is recapitalised.

The shares have been volatile since November when Euro Disney announced an unexpectedly heavy net loss of FF5.2bn ($800m) for the year to September 30. They closed yesterday at FF30.40, down from FF33.00 on Thursday.

Mr Eisner said in an interview with Le Point, the French weekly current affairs magazine, that the park's closure would be a possibility if Euro Disney failed to reach agreement with its creditor banks for an emergency restructuring of its FF2.2bn net debt.

"If we can reach a reasonable agreement... then Euro Disney will continue, that would be a happy ending in the Disney tradition," he said.

"Otherwise we'll have a much more difficult ending, if the engine of an aeroplane breaks down in mid-flight, what are your options? At the moment anything is possible, including closure."

Michael Eisner, chairman of US parent Walt Disney

The Disney chairman was ambivalent about the prospects for the negotiations. "Some days I think we'll pull it off, other days not," he said. "There are more than 50 banks involved in this affair and it's difficult to predict what such a big group will do."

Mr Eisner was repeating earlier warnings from Disney executives to the creditor banks that Euro Disneyland could close if the restructuring talks fail.

Euro Disney is expected to run out of cash imminently and its parent has promised financial support until the March 31 deadline for the end of restructuring negotiations.

Analysts dismissed yesterday's share price fall as nervousness among investors.

"All it does is underline the fragility of this stock," said one. However, the pressure on Euro Disney's shares could pose a problem for the company's hopes of securing the restructuring, given that Disney envisages including a rights issue in the rescue package.

Further falls in Euro Disney's shares would reduce the prospective proceeds of a rights issue.

Disney, which hopes the final package will halve Euro Disney's debt to FF10bn, would then face the task of persuading the banks to convert more of their debt into equity or of persuading new shareholders to invest in its stricken European subsidiary.

US tobacco group lifts Kazakhstan interest

By Frank McGurty in New York

Philip Morris has agreed to take a majority stake in Alma-Aty Tobacco Kombinat, a cigarette manufacturer in the former Soviet republic of Kazakhstan, according to Interfax, the Russian news agency.

The $310m investment in the operation, in which the US group already owns a 49 per cent interest, underlines the importance of international markets to the troubled US food and tobacco group.

Philip Morris would acquire 97 per cent of ATK, while the Kazakh government would retain "a golden share", the news agency said.

The investment includes $48.9m to acquire the equity, a $50m bonus to be paid to the Kazakh government, and about $210m in spending to improve production, tobacco growing and processing.

In September, Philip Morris agreed to buy a minority interest in the enterprise and said it would lift its stake to more than 90 per cent within a year. The deal represented the first in which a foreign company had taken a significant stake in a privatised enterprise in the former Soviet republic.

The Kazakh acquisition is the latest in a series of moves in which Philip Morris has sought to bolster its presence in foreign markets, which account for a greater percentage of its tobacco revenues than the US. The company has equity interests in tobacco operations in Russia and Lithuania.

Along with other US tobacco groups, Philip Morris's domestic revenues have been hit by declining cigarette consumption. Profits from foreign sales, meanwhile, have grown at a faster pace than domestic earnings, partly because of the increasing popularity of cut-price no-frills brands.

The investment in Kazakhstan is intended to flood the region with American-quality cigarettes. As part of the agreement, ATK will manufacture Marlboro and other leading Philip Morris brands, as well as local cigarettes.

Rothmans Asia plan thwarted

By Philip Rawsthorn

Rothmans International's radical plans to merge its tobacco operations in Hong Kong, Singapore and Malaysia into a single company have been rejected by shareholders in the Malaysian company.

The vote dealt a heavy blow to Rothmans' ambitions to strengthen its position in the developing cigarette markets of the Pacific Rim.

Independent directors of Rothmans of Pall Mall (Malaysia) - 50 per cent owned by the international group - had recommended the merger, which had earlier been agreed by shareholders in Rothmans Industries of Singapore.

Mr Anthony Jones, managing director of the Malaysian company, said he was "very disappointed" by the rejection. Shareholders' concerns had been adequately addressed at meetings during the past week, he believed. "Frankly, I'm a little nonplussed at the result."

Rothmans has not disclosed details of the shareholders' objections but they are understood to have argued strongly for maintaining an independent Malaysian company rather than pooling resources in a regional operation.

Leading dissenters are believed to include the Malaysian government's main investment arm, which holds 17.87 per cent, and the armed forces retirement fund, with 8.79 per cent.

Analysts, who expect shares in the Malaysian and Singapore companies to fall sharply when trading resumes on Monday, said investors may also have been worried about dilution of their stakes in the merger and the prospect of slow returns from new markets.

Rothmans, which would have owned 50 per cent of the new company, with the rest split between Malaysian and Singaporean shareholders, said the restructuring would have caused initial dilution of earnings but held out the prospect of higher future dividends.

The group now has to decide whether its plans can be revised to win Malaysian support or to continue its merger of the Hong Kong, a wholly-owned unit, and Singapore interests without Malaysia.

Mr Jones, however, conceded yesterday that "without Malaysia in the mix, it's not as attractive an option. Malaysia was very central."

Rothmans' merger strategy - launched last February - would have enabled the group to concentrate cash resources and management expertise to accelerate the exploitation of the region's cigarette markets.

The Hong Kong operation holds rights to markets in China, which accounts for a third of world cigarette consumption with 1,700bn cigarettes a year, Japan, Taiwan and South Korea. But high development costs in marketing and establishing sales and distribution networks have so far resulted in trading losses.

The Singapore company has access to growth markets in Thailand, Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos and Burma, as well as estimated cash reserves of $4m ($124m).

Malaysia, with a mature domestic market in which growth is slowing, has an estimated $207m cash.

The merger would thus have created a regional company - capitalised at more than $1bn - with greater potential for future growth than any of its constituents, according to analysts.

Michel Albert: key candidate

AGF chief tipped for new role

By Alice Rawsthorn

Mr Michel Albert, chairman of Assurances Générales de France (AGF), one of the largest French insurance groups, has been tipped as a member of the Monetary Policy Council, the new body which will set monetary policy for the newly independent Bank of France.

Yesterday's Le Figaro, the French newspaper, claimed Mr Albert, 68, was a key candidate for one of the nine seats on the council, which will be responsible for setting interest rate policy under the new system whereby the Bank of France will operate independently of the government.

Mr Albert accepted the post, he would have to resign from AGF, given that council members will not be allowed to hold other positions in financial or industrial circles.

AGF would not comment yesterday on the speculation about Mr Albert's future.

The Monetary Policy Council will be composed of nine members, including Mr Jean-Claude Trichet, governor of the Bank of France, and his two deputies. The names of the six new recruits will be announced on Wednesday.

Mr Michel Sapin, who was finance minister in the last socialist government, has been cited as another candidate for the council. So too has Mr Alain Prate, who is deputy chairman of the European Investment Bank.

The departure of Mr Albert would mark the end of an era for AGF, which is a prime candidate for privatisation by the Balladur government.

In his 11 years as chairman Mr Albert has turned AGF into one of France's most powerful insurers. He orchestrated the coup in 1982 whereby it expanded into Germany by taking a stake in the AMB insurance group.

Mr Antoine Jeancourt-Galligani, chairman of Banque Indosuez, the investment bank, has been mooted as a possible successor to Mr Albert at AGF, together with Mr Bernard Esambert, former chairman of Compagnie Financière Edmond de Rothschild.

Italian steel group sells subsidiary

By Haig Simonian in Milan

Ilda, the heavily loss-making Italian steel group, has made a further step towards its dismemberment and privatisation with the sale of its Cogne special steels unit.

Cogne, which specialises in stainless steel products, has been bought by Marzorati, a private steel group based in the Ticino region of Switzerland.

No price for the transaction, reported by the Ansa news agency, has been revealed and Ilda was unavailable for comment yesterday.

The Cogne subsidiary is one of a number of Ilda assets for sale as part of the group's restructuring plan. Under the scheme, Ilda has been broken up into separate companies, all of which are to be privatised.

Chief legal strategist at Prudential Securities quits

By Martin Dickson in New York

Mr Loren Schechter, chief legal strategist at Prudential Securities, has resigned from the post and as a director of the firm amid a widening government investigation into a 1980s scandal involving the sale by Prudential of high-risk real estate and energy investments.

Mr Schechter, who will remain an employee of the company, with the title of executive vice-president, had been Prudential's general counsel since 1982.

An internal Prudential memo said Mr Schechter was stepping down at his own request because of "unfortunate and unfair publicity and innuendo" in press reports about the scandal.

Last October Prudential paid $371m to settle charges of "massive misconduct" made by state and federal regulatory bodies over its sale of so-called limited partnership pooled investments - which were often portrayed as low risk ventures when they were the very opposite.

Federal prosecutors are now investigating the scandal. The US attorney's office in Manhattan is understood to be investigating the role of Prudential's legal department in vetting sales documents used in connection with the partnerships.

However, Mr Harwick Simmons, chief executive of the firm, said in the internal memo: "I strongly believe Loren has acted honourably in all his dealings with the limited-partnership issue, and that the US attorney's office will take no action once all the facts become clear."

Prudential is expected to look for a new chief counsel from outside the firm.

Olivetti in talks on disposal

By Haig Simonian

Olivetti, the Italian computers group, is in advanced negotiations to sell down its operations in Germany with the possible sale of part of its Triumph Adler subsidiary.

Details of the talks, believed to be under way since November, remain unclear. However, the group stressed that the transaction would not involve Triumph Adler's production, distribution and sales activities. Triumph Adler is best known in Germany for its typewriters and office products.

Olivetti said the talks, with an unnamed German investor group, should be concluded by February.

Olivetti bought Triumph Adler in 1986 from Volkswagen, which took a small stake in the Italian company as part payment. In the past two years, Triumph Adler has undergone a wide-ranging restructuring to staunch heavy losses.

Pharmacia buys rest of FICE

Pharmacia of Sweden has completed the acquisition of Italy's Farmitalia Carlo Erba and Erbamont (FICE) in a SKr3.8bn ($467m) deal. Reuter reports from Stockholm.

Pharmacia took up the option to buy the remaining 49 per cent of the company ahead of an earlier agreed date. Under the original agreement, it would buy the rest of FICE sometime in 1994 or 1995.

The seller was Holdback Holdings, which is owned by a consortium of banks.

The first 51 per cent of FICE was bought in May. Pharmacia said. Procordia, the Swedish diversified company, was split into two companies in the autumn, of which one is Pharmacia, the pharmaceutical company.

Montedison, the Italian pharmaceutical group, owned FICE before the sale in May. It sold its remaining 49 per cent to Holdback Holdings later that month.

LATIN AMERICAN & CARIBBEAN

SURVEY PROGRAMME 1994

As part of our continued commitment to covering economic recovery across this important region. The Financial Times will once again be publishing a full programme of country and regional Surveys during 1994. Those confirmed (to date) include:

	1994
JAMAICA	February 28
LATIN AMERICAN FINANCE	April 11
BRAZIL	April / May
ARGENTINA	May 18
NAFTA (North American Free Trade Agreement)	May 24
BOLIVIA	August / September
MEXICO	October 10

For information on advertising opportunities and rates please contact:

PAUL MARAVIGLIA
on 071-873 3447 or fax: 071-873 3595

FINANCIAL TIMES
LONDON PARIS FRANKFURT NEW YORK TOKYO

CONTEMPORARY CLASSICS FROM THE FINANCIAL TIMES

THE FT DESK DIARY WITH OVER 100 PAGES OF METICULOUSLY RESEARCHED INFORMATION PRESENTED IN A CHOICE OF THREE SUPERB FINISHES MUST BE YOUR CHOICE FOR 1994.

The FT Desk Diary is an invaluable aid to good management. Not only does it make day-to-day planning simpler and more efficient, it's also indispensable as a permanent ready reference source. In fact it's like having an international database on hand.

Whether you need important statistical information, business vocabulary in four languages or details of which airlines fly to which cities, the FT Desk Diary will tell you. Plan your trip to the smallest detail with the help of the diary's useful information.

THE CONTENTS THAT MAKE IT MORE THAN A DIARY

Business Directory: Lists the top 100 international banks, computerised databases, world stock markets, Business Travel. Has 30 pages of country surveys covering airports, car hire, hotels, visa and currency regulations. Also, a business vocabulary in four languages, world time differences and maps of the world's major business centres. Diary Section: Starts from 25th November 1993, 25th January 1994 and shows a week to view, international public holidays, number of days passed and left in the year together with calendar week numbers. Plus four months of the 1994 calendar on each spread. Statistics and Analysis: Graphs showing the FT Actuaries British Government Securities All-Stocks Index, FT-SE 100 Index, Dow Jones Industrial Average, the Standard and Poors 500 Composite Index and the Nikkei Average Index. World Atlas: 48 pages in full colour. Detachable Addressphone book with international dialling codes.

BOUND TO GET YOU NOTICED

According to your taste and budget, there's a selection of cover bindings. Choose from rich black leather, burgundy bonded leather or black leathercloth.

THE FT CHAIRMAN'S SET

For those wanting the ultimate in quality and craftsmanship, there's the FT Chairman's Set. Comprising a matching desk and pocket diary, it is bound in rich brown leather with fine gold tooling on the cover and comes complete in its own presentation box.

THE FT POCKET DIARY

The FT Pocket Diary has a week to view diary section and contains 34 pages of business and travel information. It has white pages and is available in black leather, burgundy bonded leather and black leathercloth. Comes with a detachable phone directory which tucks inside the back of the diary.

THE FT PINK POCKET DIARY

The FT Pink Pocket Diary with its unique week to view landscape format has the same information as the FT Pocket Diary and is hugely popular. It has FT-pink pages and is covered in black bonded leather. Personal detachable phone directory is included.

THE FT EURO DIARY

The definitive European Desk Diary leads you through the labyrinth of EC departments, shows how the legislative system works and gives the most comprehensive country guides available anywhere. Key section headings are in five languages. Week to view format divided into one hour segments. Full colour atlas and detachable phone directory is included.

FT COLLECTION - A QUALITY PROPOSITION

This is a small selection from the FT Collection range. Send for our colour catalogue and see for yourself. It is packed with many business essentials from diaries to document cases. Contact us now on 0453 576144, or write to: FT Collection, 20 Kipson Road, Guildford, Surrey, GU1 3LE.

ADD EXCLUSIVITY TO AN ALREADY EXCLUSIVE

Our diaries will be doubly welcome if they are personalised with initials and surname in high quality, long lasting gold blocking. It's the kind of personal touch that enhances the pleasure and worth to the user.

THE WORLD'S MOST APPRECIATED BUSINESS GIFTS
Our business services include: Gold blocking of your logo
Up to eight sides of publicity material in the diaries
Direct despatch of your gifts to the recipients together with your complimentary slips or greetings cards
Samples are available on request. Order 25 items or more from the FT Collection and you will qualify for discounts of up to 25%.

FOR YOUR FREE FT COLLECTION COLOUR CATALOGUE RING 0453 576144 NOW!

ORDER FORM
Please tick where applicable
REF: 001024
PO Box 5, Camberley, Surrey GU15 9EQ
Fax: 0209 612830

Name: _____
Company: _____
Address: _____
Postcode: _____
Telephone: _____
Fax: _____

How to complete your order.
1. Indicate the country and district required & indicate how many items you wish to have. Quotations will be sent to you by return of post. Please quote your order number.

PRODUCT	CODE	UNIT PRICE	QUANTITY	TOTAL
Desk Diary	02	£175.00	1	£175.00
Chairman's Set	03	£250.00	1	£250.00
Pocket Diary	04	£75.00	1	£75.00
Pink Pocket Diary	05	£75.00	1	£75.00
Euro Diary	06	£125.00	1	£125.00
Personalised Diaries	07	£100.00	1	£100.00
Diary Section	08	£25.00	1	£25.00
Business Directory	09	£25.00	1	£25.00
Statistics & Analysis	10	£25.00	1	£25.00
World Atlas	11	£25.00	1	£25.00
Addressphone Book	12	£25.00	1	£25.00
TOTAL

13. Please send me the FT Collection Colour Catalogue and Guide form.
14. I am interested in using the FT Collection as business gifts, please send me details.
15. I wish to place a firm order as detailed below.

HOW TO PAY BY PHONE: you can pay by credit card by phoning and order on our Credit Card Centre Line 0209 612830. BY FAX: you wish to pay by credit card you can fax your order to us on 0209 612830. BY MAIL: Return this order form with your payment to the address given above. Payment must accompany order and cheques should be drawn on a UK bank account payable to: "FT Collection".

Method of payment: ☐ Cheque ☐ Credit Card ☐ Cash ☐ Other Credit Card ORDER LINE: 0209 612820

Card No: _____
Signature: _____
Date: _____

Employ Date: _____
For further information on business gift orders, please ring 0453 576144.

COMMODITIES AND BOND PRICES

YEAR IN THE MARKETS
Metals end 1993 in good heart

Despite running into general year-end profit-taking yesterday, London Metal Exchange base metal contracts mostly ended 1993 with their tails up as traders looked forward to a sustained upturn in global economic activity in 1994. The scars left by a dismal first half were still plain to see, however, with 12-month price falls ranging from just under 7 per cent for zinc to more than 20 per cent for copper. An honourable exception was lead, which ended about 60 per cent up on the year.

Precious metals ended with substantial gains on the year, though gold bulls were still waiting for a decisive breach of the psychological barrier at $400 a troy ounce. Similarly, cocoa and coffee markets, having shaken out some of the speculative gains of recent months, were widely expected to take off again this year.

In contrast, oil traders saw little reason to expect a significant price upturn after a year that saw the Brent blend crude price slump by nearly 37 per cent to a five-year low.

The LME copper market had a very mixed year. An early rise fuelled by Chinese buying was followed by a steep price slide that culminated in a 5½-year low in May and landed several trading houses with huge losses. That was followed by a severe technical squeeze that was alleged to result from manipulation by Sumitomo, the Japanese metals group.

At its height the squeeze pushed the cash price to an $80-a-tonne premium over the three months price. When the squeeze ended in September – as a result, some traders suggested, of behind-the-scenes pressure by exchange authorities – the cash premium quickly turned into a discount, as was more in keeping with the fact that LME warehouse stocks of the metal stood at a 15-year high. By the end of October prices had plunged to six-year lows but they have since recovered by 14 per cent.

The aluminium market, already in the doldrums, had less downside potential than copper at the start of 1993. But as the flood of material from the former Soviet Union continued, it easily fulfilled that potential, the three months price dipping to an eight-year low of $1,040 a tonne at the end of November.

Since then multilateral talks aimed at controlling the glut of material on the world aluminium market have helped sentiment and the market has recovered by nearly $100.

The economic hopes that lifted the base metals from their lows also helped silver, the most "industrial" of the precious metals, which ended the year with its price nearly 40 per cent up. Platinum, also principally an industrial metal, fared less well, reflecting its dependence on the recession-hit Japanese market.

Gold had a relatively good year, its price ending more than 17 per cent higher. And many analysts expected 1994 to see it move substantially above $400 an ounce, a level reached briefly last year. The rise began in earnest in May, following an operation by investors George Soros and Sir James Goldsmith, involving the purchase of shares in Newmont Mining, the biggest US gold producer, by the former from the latter, who used some of the cash to buy gold options. At the London Commodity Exchange, cocoa set the pace with a second position rise amounting to 65 per cent on the year, despite a recent 12 per cent retracement. The gain was encouraged by expectations of a continued drawdown from world stocks over the next few seasons as consumption growth outpaced production. It was topped up by speculative activity in response to concern about the political stability of the Ivory Coast, the world's biggest cocoa producer, after the long-expected death of President Felix Houphouët-Boigny last month, and the recent decline has been partly a reaction to the orderly hand-over of power in that country.

Coffee futures were buoyed in the autumn in anticipation of the producers' export retention scheme, under which they are aiming to hold 20 per cent of their supplies off the world market. Since the scheme has been operating, however, the price gain since the start of the year has been trimmed back from 27 per cent to 16 per cent.

In oil prices the traffic was all one way after the spring as members of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries proved unable to forge an agreement to bring export quotas down to match flagging demand. And with the coming of the northern winter falling to underpin prices and the prospect of Iraqi crude's return to the market moving ever closer, analysts could see little reason to expect an upturn.

Richard Mooney

BASE METALS

LONDON METAL EXCHANGE

(Prices from Amalgamated Metal Trading)

■ ALUMINIUM, 99.7 PURITY ($ per tonne)

Close 1107.5-8.5 1125-5.5

High/Low 1102.5-1.5 1137-4

Previous High/Low 1107.5-8.5 1125-5.5

AM Official 1107.5-8.5 1125-5.5

Kerb close 1124-5

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ ALUMINIUM ALLOY ($ per tonne)

Close 981-2 985-80

High/Low 970-81 1000-5

Previous High/Low 981-2 985-80

AM Official 981-2 985-80

Kerb close 981-2 985-80

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ LEAD ($ per tonne)

Close 473-4 486-7

High/Low 465-5-6.5 488-600

Previous High/Low 473-4 486-7

AM Official 473-4 486-7

Kerb close 473-4 486-7

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ ZINC ($ per tonne)

Close 4745-55 4765-600

High/Low 4675-50 4925-6

Previous High/Low 4745-55 4765-600

AM Official 4745-55 4765-600

Kerb close 4745-55 4765-600

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ COPPER, grade A ($ per tonne)

Close 1767-7.5 1788-8.5

High/Low 1767-7.5 1788-8.5

Previous High/Low 1767-7.5 1788-8.5

AM Official 1767-7.5 1788-8.5

Kerb close 1767-7.5 1788-8.5

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ LME AM Official C/S rate 1.4754

LME Closing C/S rate 1.4754

Spot: L754 3 mth: 4758 6 mth: 4880 9 mth: 4838

■ HIGH GRADE COPPER COMD

Close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Previous High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

AM Official 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Kerb close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover 87,947 4,588

■ LME AM Official C/S rate 1.4754

LME Closing C/S rate 1.4754

Spot: L754 3 mth: 4758 6 mth: 4880 9 mth: 4838

■ HIGH GRADE COPPER COMD

Close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Previous High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

AM Official 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Kerb close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover 87,947 4,588

■ LME AM Official C/S rate 1.4754

LME Closing C/S rate 1.4754

Spot: L754 3 mth: 4758 6 mth: 4880 9 mth: 4838

■ HIGH GRADE COPPER COMD

Close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Previous High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

AM Official 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Kerb close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover 87,947 4,588

■ LME AM Official C/S rate 1.4754

LME Closing C/S rate 1.4754

Spot: L754 3 mth: 4758 6 mth: 4880 9 mth: 4838

■ HIGH GRADE COPPER COMD

Close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Previous High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

AM Official 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Kerb close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover 87,947 4,588

■ LME AM Official C/S rate 1.4754

LME Closing C/S rate 1.4754

Spot: L754 3 mth: 4758 6 mth: 4880 9 mth: 4838

■ HIGH GRADE COPPER COMD

Close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Previous High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

AM Official 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Kerb close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover 87,947 4,588

■ LME AM Official C/S rate 1.4754

LME Closing C/S rate 1.4754

Spot: L754 3 mth: 4758 6 mth: 4880 9 mth: 4838

■ HIGH GRADE COPPER COMD

Close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Previous High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

AM Official 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Kerb close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover 87,947 4,588

■ LME AM Official C/S rate 1.4754

LME Closing C/S rate 1.4754

Spot: L754 3 mth: 4758 6 mth: 4880 9 mth: 4838

■ HIGH GRADE COPPER COMD

Close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Previous High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

AM Official 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Kerb close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover 87,947 4,588

■ LME AM Official C/S rate 1.4754

LME Closing C/S rate 1.4754

Spot: L754 3 mth: 4758 6 mth: 4880 9 mth: 4838

■ HIGH GRADE COPPER COMD

Close 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Previous High/Low 82.56 +0.45 82.60 1.50 138

Precious Metals continued

■ GOLD COMEX (100 Troy oz; $/troy oz)

Close 382.8 385.6 61 121

High/Low 382.8 385.6 61 121

Previous High/Low 382.8 385.6 61 121

AM Official 382.8 385.6 61 121

Kerb close 382.8 385.6 61 121

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ PLATINUM NYMEX (50 Troy oz; $/troy oz)

Close 384.8 385.0 2,172 1,037

High/Low 384.8 385.0 2,172 1,037

Previous High/Low 384.8 385.0 2,172 1,037

AM Official 384.8 385.0 2,172 1,037

Kerb close 384.8 385.0 2,172 1,037

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ PALLADIUM NYMEX (100 Troy oz; $/troy oz)

Close 124.35 124.00 124.00 3,323 330

High/Low 124.35 124.00 124.00 3,323 330

Previous High/Low 124.35 124.00 124.00 3,323 330

AM Official 124.35 124.00 124.00 3,323 330

Kerb close 124.35 124.00 124.00 3,323 330

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ SILVER COMEX (100 Troy oz; $/troy oz)

Close 508.7 508.7 510.5 12,487 174

High/Low 508.7 508.7 510.5 12,487 174

Previous High/Low 508.7 508.7 510.5 12,487 174

AM Official 508.7 508.7 510.5 12,487 174

Kerb close 508.7 508.7 510.5 12,487 174

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ TIN ($ per tonne)

Close 4745-55 4765-600

High/Low 4675-50 4925-6

Previous High/Low 4745-55 4765-600

AM Official 4745-55 4765-600

Kerb close 4745-55 4765-600

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ CRUDE OIL NYMEX (42,000 US gal; $/barrel)

Close 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

High/Low 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

Previous High/Low 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

AM Official 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

Kerb close 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ CRUDE OIL IPE ($/barrel)

Close 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

High/Low 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

Previous High/Low 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

AM Official 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

Kerb close 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

Open Int. N/A

Total daily turnover N/A

■ HEATING OIL NYMEX (42,000 US gal; $/barrel)

Close 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

High/Low 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

Previous High/Low 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

AM Official 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

Kerb close 14.17 14.18 14.13 10,385 25,711

CURRENCIES AND MONEY

MARKETS REPORT

$ and £ stronger

The dollar and sterling ended the year on a bullish note yesterday as investors and traders looked forward to further steady growth in the US and British economies, writes Peter Norton.

Although London trading was thin, reflecting the closure of markets in Japan, Germany, the Netherlands, Denmark and the virtual absence of activity in the UK around lunchtime, dealers expected the firm undertone of both currencies to be reflected in the new year.

The charts show, both the dollar and sterling closed near five-month highs against the D-Mark with the dollar about 1% higher against the D-Mark and the sterling up nearly 4% per cent.

Although the D-Mark moved slightly against the French franc yesterday, rising to FF440.1 from FF440.0 on Thursday, it ended 1993 slightly weaker than at the start of the year when it was at FF438.4. Since October, the franc has recouped the losses it suffered as a result of the July-August mechanism.

The yen was another former high-flyer to the yen at a comparatively low ebb. Although the dollar ended 1993 more than 10% down against the yen, its climb in the European exchange mechanism.

London yesterday marked a recovery of about 10% per cent from its mid-August low of Y101.13.

Strong economic indicators pointing to fast fourth quarter growth and mounting expectations that the Federal Reserve will have in short-term interest early this year underpinned the Japanese currency's climb.

Source: FT Graphix

The US currency was also buying against the yen when it dipped against the dollar.

However, there was a limit to its upwards potential because operators were unwilling to take on large positions in an illiquid money market.

The dollar closed in London at DM1.737. However, it was fractionally lower against the yen at Y111.605 against Y111.845. The dollar's slight decline against the Japanese currency was some profit-taking on long dollar positions as investors lifted their hands at the year's end.

The dollar also continued to be pinned down by sell orders placed by Japanese exporters at around Y112. However, traders pointed to good buying support in the dollar dipped in Y111.5 as an illustration of its strength.

Sterling rose against the D-Mark and dollar in London yesterday in spite of an absence of news. It gained nearly 1 pfennig against the D-Mark to close at DM2.5692 against DM2.5691 on Thursday.

It was just 2 pfennigs below the late July high against the German currency. It was up on its D-Mark low for the year of DM2.5691 recorded in late February.

The pound moved slightly higher against the dollar to close at $1.4795 yesterday from $1.4788 on Thursday, bringing a year of erratic movements against the dollar currency to an end.

Although at yesterday's close sterling was only 2.5% down on the dollar at the start of the year, it fell in mid-February in a low of $1.42 rising to $1.51 in late April.

The Bank of England provided the UK money market with a £1.75bn of liquidity yesterday compared with a £1.75bn shortage. Some £1.545bn of assistance was provided during the year of its regular money market dealings. It provided

POUND SPOT FORWARD AGAINST THE POUND

Dec 31	Closing mid-point	Change on day	Day's spread	Day's Mid high	One month	Three months	One year	Bank of England
Europe	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Austria	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Belgium	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Denmark	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
France	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Germany	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Greece	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Ireland	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Italy	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Luxembourg	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Netherlands	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Norway	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Portugal	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Spain	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Sweden	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Switzerland	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
UK	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
USA	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
South Africa	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Argentina	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Brazil	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Canada	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Chile	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Colombia	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Czech	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Denmark	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Egypt	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Finland	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
France	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Germany	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Greece	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Hong Kong	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
India	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Indonesia	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Japan	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Malaysia	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
New Zealand	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Norway	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Philippines	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Portugal	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
South Korea	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Spain	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Sweden	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Switzerland	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Taiwan	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Thailand	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
UK	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
USA	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
South Africa	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Argentina	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Brazil	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Canada	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Chile	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Colombia	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Czech	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Denmark	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Egypt	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
Finland	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788
France	1.4788	+0.0027	0.0000	1.4815	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788	1.4788

INSURANCE

32

INITIAL PRICE: Charge made on sale of shares to the public. It is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public. It is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public. It is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public.

OFFER PRICE: Also called issue price. The price at which the shares are first offered to the public. It is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public. It is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public.

CANCELLATION PRICE: This is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public. It is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public. It is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public.

FORWARD PRICING: The price at which the shares are first offered to the public. It is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public. It is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public.

SCHEDULE PARTICULARS AND REPORTS: The most recent report of the company's financial condition. It is the price at which the shares are first offered to the public.

Other company reports that are in the public domain of the company are:

SE Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Information:

SESA Group of Companies, London W20 7JH

TEL 071-224-3040.

Grown Financial Management Ltd

[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible]

- Contd.
0022	000556
0023	000557
0024	000558
0025	000559
0026	000560
0027	000561
0028	000562
0029	000563
0030	000564
0031	000565
0032	000566
0033	000567
0034	000568
0035	000569
0036	000570
0037	000571
0038	000572
0039	000573
0040	000574
0041	000575
0042	000576
0043	000577
0044	000578
0045	000579
0046	000580
0047	000581
0048	000582
0049	000583
0050	000584
0051	000585
0052	000586
0053	000587
0054	000588
0055	000589
0056	000590
0057	000591
0058	000592
0059	000593
0060	000594
0061	000595
0062	000596
0063	000597
0064	000598
0065	000599
0066	000600
0067	000601
0068	000602
0069	000603
0070	000604
0071	000605
0072	000606
0073	000607
0074	000608
0075	000609
0076	000610
0077	000611
0078	000612
0079	000613
0080	000614
0081	000615
0082	000616
0083	000617
0084	000618
0085	000619
0086	000620
0087	000621
0088	000622
0089	000623
0090	000624
0091	000625
0092	000626
0093	000627
0094	000628
0095	000629
0096	000630
0097	000631
0098	000632
0099	000633
0100	000634
0101	000635
0102	000636
0103	000637
0104	000638
0105	000639
0106	000640
0107	000641
0108	000642
0109	000643
0110	000644
0111	000645
0112	000646
0113	000647
0114	000648
0115	000649
0116	000650
0117	000651
0118	000652
0119	000653
0120	000654
0121	000655
0122	000656
0123	000657
0124	000658
0125	000659
0126	000660
0127	000661
0128	000662
0129	000663
0130	000664
0131	000665
0132	000666
0133	000667
0134	000668
0135	000669
0136	000670
0137	000671
0138	000672
0139	000673
0140	000674
0141	000675
0142	000676
0143	000677
0144	000678
0145	000679
0146	000680
0147	000681
0148	000682
0149	000683
0150	000684
0151	000685
0152	000686
0153	000687
0154	000688
0155	000689
0156	000690
0157	000691
0158	000692
0159	000693
0160	000694
0161	000695
0162	000696
0163	000697
0164	000698
0165	000699
0166	000700
0167	000701
0168	000702
0169	000703
0170	000704
0171	000705
0172	000706
0173	000707
0174	000708
0175	000709
0176	000710
0177	000711
0178	000712
0179	000713
0180	000714
0181	000715
0182	000716
0183	000717
0184	000718
0185	000719
0186	000720
0187	000721
0188	000722
0189	000723
0190	000724
0191	000725
0192	000726
0193	000727
0194	000728
0195	000729
0196	000730
0197	000731
0198	000732
0199	000733
0200	000734

Domestic Fund	431.9	427.9
Domestic Policy Fund	182.7	172.5	-5.6
Intl. Fund	181.1	172.5	-5.8
Corporate Bond	147.0	138.8	-5.6

[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible]

● FT Cityline Unit Trust Prices ■ available over the telephone. Call the FT Cityline Help Line ■ (071) 873 1111 for more details.

هكذا عنه لأصل

Old Price	Old Price	+ or -	Yield Gross	Old Price	Old Price	+ or -	Yield Gross	Old Price	Old Price	+ or -	Yield Gross	Old Price	Old Price	+ or -	Yield Gross
-----------	-----------	--------	-------------	-----------	-----------	--------	-------------	-----------	-----------	--------	-------------	-----------	-----------	--------	-------------

Source: Pew Research Center, "U.S. Public's Views on Global Climate Change," March 2001.

WORLD STOCK MARKETS

AMERICA

Dow helped by stable bonds

Wall Street

US stocks were ending the year on a positive note yesterday morning as renewed stability in the bond market brought some cheer to a quiet trading session, writes Frank McGarry in New York.

By midday, the Dow Jones Industrial Average was higher at 3,779.52, while the more broadly based Standard & Poor's 500 was 1.04 ahead at 4,000.10. The secondary indices showed modest gains as well, with the American SE composite up 0.86 at 473.41 and the Nasdaq composite 1.97 at 773.05.

Activity on the NYSE was extremely light, with only 65m shares traded by 12pm. Advancing issues led declines, 979 to 781.

EUROPE

Paris down as Eurostocks diverge

There was good news and bad news from Paris on the stock market yesterday, writes David Smith in London.

"Our relative valuation indicators suggest that European equities can rise another 10-20 per cent before reaching excessive valuations," said the broker, "but risks are increasing. We don't expect a crash or the start of a bear market, but a 5-10 per cent correction is far from excluded."

PARIS itself was out of steam, the CAC-40 closing 10.3 lower at 2,268.21, a little under 1 per cent up on the week.

The market's momentum moved apart again. Eurotunnel rose to FF20.50, nearly 10 per cent higher since October. Euro Disney, however, fell to FF2.60, or 13 per cent lower at FF30.40. In an interview published yesterday, chairman of Euro Disney's parent, Disney, said he was out of possibility that the park outside Paris might be closed if parent and creditor banks did not agree on a restructuring plan.

Accor, the hotel group, rose to FF9.50 on the company's plans to help the Chinese government renovate some 100 state-run hotels.

MILAN saw further demand for shares in an otherwise becalmed market and the

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

Comit index ended at 818.47, for a 1.1 per cent rise on the week.

The secondary indices diverged. The FTSE-100 rose 1.34, 70 in heavy volume of 1.5m shares, as further consolidation of the agreement with Shell in exchange for their shares business. The FTSE-100 in its capital call was well received.

ASIA PACIFIC

Region ends in record setting mood

Pacific Rim markets ignored the absence of Tokyo's number of other markets, already on holiday, to continue their record setting ways.

TAIWAN ended another 4.4 per cent up on the day, for a cumulative weekly rise of 15.4 per cent, to 4,000.10, a month high.

The weighted average of 257.01 ended at 6,070.56 in turnover that surged to 7,842.1bn, the heaviest since June 1992.

Managers of very large global funds will not have found the going easy. The largest equity markets, the UK, Japan, and the US, among the poorest performers in 1992, providing local currency of 10 per cent and 13 per cent respectively.

With the benefit of hindsight, it is easy to see how market trends reflected changes in recovery prospects. Growth in the UK economy, for example, in the 11th reported in line with expectations prevalent at the start of the year, hence the steady but slow stock market performance.

By contrast, expectations for Japanese economy were continuously downgraded as it progressed. Not surprisingly, the stock market apart from the half of the year.

The disappointing outcome in Japan was compensated for by the strength of the yen. Returns to Japanese investors in Japan were enhanced by upwards of 10 per cent. This was no help to Japanese investors, who suffered from the effect. Only did they return a relatively miserable return from their own market, but their returns from overseas investments were diluted by the relative weakness of other currencies.

Given the performance of the two major markets, it will be the least constrained and most adventurous fund managers who will top the performance tables for last year. The FT-A World Index excluding both the UK and Japan gave a return of 10 per cent in dollar terms; two markets, Hong Kong and Malaysia, than doubled.

So, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

SO, what else is there to contemplate about 1992? On the whole, it was just wonderful.

Outstanding year tests major global investors

Adrian Fitzgerald's analysis of a prosperous 1993

And, anyway, what's all this mumbo-jumbo about investment efficiency? Well, first of all, we have to adjust to a low inflation/low interest environment. Investors in the UK, in particular, have not experienced since the 1980s. And as performance figures will highlight, bond returns can be just as good as equity returns in such an environment. It is time for UK investors to consider whether their very aggressive exposure to equities provides the most efficient trade-off between risk and reward.

Investors who dismiss this notion on the grounds that the bull run in bonds is now over should think carefully. Current equity market ratings worldwide can only be justified if inflation and interest rates stay low.

US investors, who taught us all to know and love about modern diversification techniques, must be kicking themselves for not putting theory into practice. The typical US pension fund holds only around 6 per cent in foreign assets. It will not require much contemplation, in the light of last year's relative performance, to see that this is an inefficient mix.

The evidence suggests, however, that this problem is starting to be addressed. Almost 10 per cent of equity funds in the first nine months of 1992 moved into Europe.

The good news for European stockbrokers is that there is much more to come. And investors are contemplating efficiency, they are not forgetting about cash. Last year's bull market was a large extent by a flight out of low-interest, but risk-free, cash deposits into supposedly higher-yielding equities. So it worked.

But retail and institutional investors alike must remain alert to the risks they face.

Not that 1993 threatens to be a lean year. Recovery in the US and the UK will continue; the rest of Europe is stabilising; Japan should be in a second half.

The key to equity market performances will be the trend in interest rates and, especially, support provided by bond markets. Here again, there are no great dangers lurking.

What investors have to bear in mind, however, is that, by definition, the outlook is always rosy at the top of bull markets. The solution is to weigh the risks against potential rewards against investment needs and to invest accordingly.

Nevertheless, as a European-based stockbroker, it would be irresponsible of me to point out to US investors that a hedged investment in selected European markets, notably the UK, France and Spain, is likely to be rewarding in 1993.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

Footnote: All market statistics have been calculated on the close of markets on December 31, 1992. Adrian Fitzgerald is director of equity research at NatWest Securities, Edinburgh.

LONDON SHARE SERVICEINVESTMENT TRUSTS - Cont.[illegible]

Greenwood Dev.	1361	1481
Grovenor	1361	1481
HSBC Japan S&K	867	68
Warriors	49	84
Nordesten Eastlink	118	118
Zero Div	303	303
Zero Div	122	122
Warriors	30	30
Nordesten Eastlink	287	287
HSBC Japan S&K	39	39
Hong Kong	73	73
Warriors	8	8
Zero Div	303	303
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182
HSBC Japan S&K	102	102
Warriors	37	37
HSBC Optimum	112	112
Zero Div	211	211
HSBC Japan S&K	103	103
Warriors	37	37
Investors Cap.	182	182

[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible]

هكذا آمنه لأصل

RESEARCH Count

for more information on FT Cityline.

DALE
DALE
DALE

Manufacturers of generating aerospace ground power equipment &
battery based systems

Dale Power Systems plc
City Buildings North Yorkshire YO1 1SP
Tel 0723 614141 Telex 52153 Fax 0723 615733

FINANCIAL TIMES

Weekend January 1/January 2 1994

MoDo
PULP, PAPER &
PAPERBOARD

Tele-Communications takes majority stake in Flextech media group US cable operator enters UK

By Raymond Snoddy

Tele-Communications, the largest US cable television operator, is taking a "second force" in the UK cable and satellite market by merging its European channels with Flextech, a British former oil services company that has turned itself into a media group.

Tele-Communications (TCD) is taking a 60.4% stake, valued at more than £200m, in Flextech. It will acquire all European channels of United Artists European Holdings, a wholly-owned subsidiary of TCD.

The enlarged TCD will hold a stake in five of the 12 satellite channels that make up the multi-channel subscription package on BSkyB. These comprise Bravo, which is itself "time-shifted" television, the satellite broadcaster in which Pearson, owner of the Financial Times, has a significant stake.

four other channels: Discovery, the factual channel, The Parliamentary Channel and WTV TV, an entertainment channel. It is also responsible for the marketing of The Country Music Channel which, like Discovery, is part of the BSkyB package. The channels involved are making, and the deal is underpinning, a 10-year agreement with BSkyB. Each channel in the subscription package receives 15p per subscriber per month. TCD has 3.1m subscribers in one of its subscription services.

The merger was first revealed in October. Flextech shares jumped 224p. Its shares are currently suspended at 379p. The agreement will give TCD a presence in the UK with Bell Atlantic, the US telephone company - a European vehicle for future expansion. Flextech was announced yesterday it was increasing its stake in IVS, a UK cable company with headquarters in Oxford, Stafford, Andover, Salisbury and Jersey.

Change of channel, Page 5

EEA links 17 nations in largest trade zone

Continued from Page 1

passport" for financial services operating across the EU will extend to the whole EEA. Banks and insurance companies will be able to operate and raise capital across the 17 nations.

The EFTA study predicted that competition in financial services could produce gains worth 1.3 per cent of combined EEA GDP, concentrated heavily in the small, more protected EFTA economies.

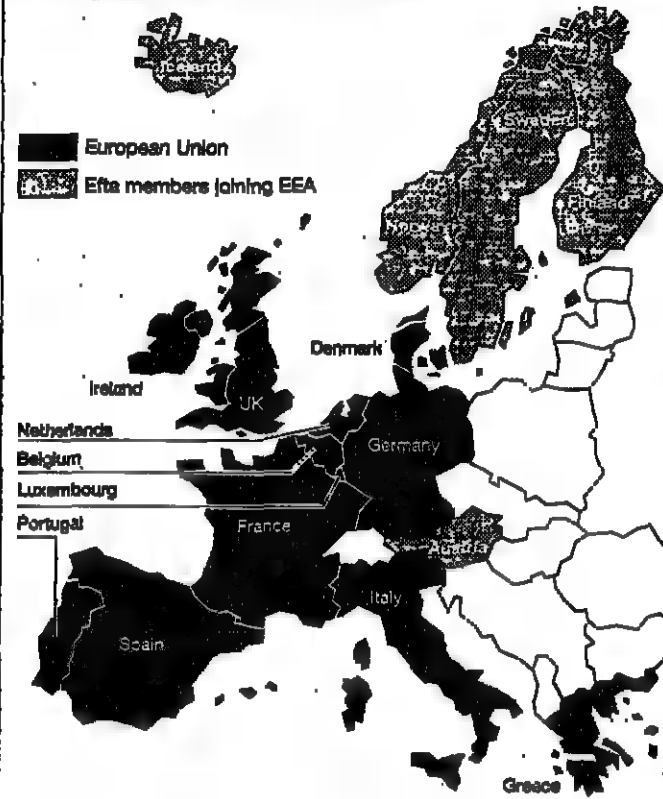

Capital and labour will, in theory, be able to move freely throughout the EEA, with some restrictions on direct investment in areas such as property and industries in the EFTA countries.

The EFTA nations have as a result of the treaty adopted EU competition rules against monopolies, and on mergers and state aid. They also become part of a single market in public procurement, enhancing competition for government contracts. The study estimated that EFTA at more than £500bn in 1990, a year.

The five nations have also aligned their legislation with EU company law, environment, research and development, and social policy. But the 12 and the five maintain separate agricultural regimes under the EEA, and some special provisions on fisheries, energy and transport.

The mammoth negotiations leading to the EEA left the tricky latter issues as the main stumbling point in Austria, Sweden, Finland and Norway

European Economic Area

full EU membership. Mr Jacques Delors, President of the Commission, originally conceived of the EEA as a halfway house between the EU and EFTA.

The five nations have also aligned their legislation with EU company law, environment, research and development, and social policy. But the 12 and the five maintain separate agricultural regimes under the EEA, and some special provisions on fisheries, energy and transport.

The mammoth negotiations leading to the EEA left the tricky latter issues as the main stumbling point in Austria, Sweden, Finland and Norway full EU membership. Mr Jacques Delors, President of the Commission, originally conceived of the EEA as a halfway house between the EU and EFTA.

The five nations have also aligned their legislation with EU company law, environment, research and development, and social policy. But the 12 and the five maintain separate agricultural regimes under the EEA, and some special provisions on fisheries, energy and transport.

The mammoth negotiations leading to the EEA left the tricky latter issues as the main stumbling point in Austria, Sweden, Finland and Norway

The mammoth negotiations leading to the EEA left the tricky latter issues as the main stumbling point in Austria, Sweden, Finland and Norway

US adviser supported Banesto's president

By Peter Bruce and John Geppier in Madrid

The board of Banesto, the Spanish credit institution, has received a letter from its corporate adviser, the US bank J.P. Morgan, expressing confidence in Banesto's president, Mr Mario Conde.

A bank of Spain executive yesterday confirmed that the central bank had received a letter on Monday night, supporting Banesto's management and saying a $400m (£271m) convertible bond issue which had been pending could take place in the new year if market conditions permitted.

The letter to Mr Luis Angel Rojo, Bank of Spain governor, was signed by Mr Roberto Mendoza, the Morgan vice-chairman who was Banesto's corporate adviser. Mr Mendoza also sat on the board of Banesto, which was announced on Tuesday by the Bank of Spain.

The letter came at a time of strong disagreement of opinion between Morgan and the central bank over the state of Banesto's finances.

Mr Rojo issued a statement before a parliamentary committee on Thursday of inadequate management.

Mr Rojo criticised the "deficiencies of information, organisation and control" at Banesto which had led the bank to expand its loan book too rapidly between 1988 and 1991. This contributed, he said, to a "substantial overvaluation of the bank's assets" (£41.2bn) in 1991.

THE LEX COLUMN

Ruling power

FT-SE 1000 3418.4

Source: Datastream

given the environmental liabilities they carry.

Steady erosion of the generators' earnings will also be a factor. That particularly affects National Power, which is likely to see its share price fall.

usually as a defence, National Power's earnings are already lower than PowerGen's, emphasising the difference in growth prospects, even without a Monopolies reference, by UK Monopolies Power may be selling its shares at a price of 100p.

usually as a defence, National Power's earnings are already lower than PowerGen's, emphasising the difference in growth prospects, even without a Monopolies reference, by UK Monopolies Power may be selling its shares at a price of 100p.

UK equities

There was undoubtedly a lot of froth behind the FT-SE 100's 50 point rise on Wednesday - as is shown by its virtual evaporation in the subsequent trading days of a holiday-short week. That lends weight to the view that the market's rally in the closing weeks of the year was fuelled by short-covering and speculators related to the expiry of futures contracts and options. If so, one must be wary of expecting too much by way of a new rally. The market may have served some satisfaction from the still modest evidence of a reasonably strong Christmas in the shops. Then again, the better the economic news, the less reason to expect an interest rate cut early this year.

something which the market has hitherto been expecting.

Indeed, the government's natural temptation may be to raise its rate until the rate increases start to bite in the spring. The chance that rate in Europe followed by a rise in sterling might force the government's hand must be regarded as an outside one while the recovery remains on track. So is the possibility that the authorities may decide to increase inflation by allowing a rate and before annual mortgage rate rises at the end of this month.

Uncertainty over timing may cause the equity market to pause for breath, but it should not undermine the fundamentally positive trend. While rate rises are on the agenda over the next few months, the rise of world funds from the equity market should continue - and the new highs reached by Hong Kong are a reminder that international liquidity remains strong as ever. Wednesday's record FT-SE 3418.4 may not hold for long.

Railtrack

The Treasury seems finally to be warning in the transport sector. After its consent to the extension of Euro-tunnel's franchise, it has now reduced the return requirements on Railtrack for the early years of rail privatisation. In its first year, Railtrack, which is to operate the track and signalling under the new arrangements, will only have to generate enough revenue to earn a 10 per cent return on capital. This is welcome evidence of a more pragmatic approach - but the target will rise in stages to 8 per cent and the Treasury still will not give much more.

Railtrack has lost the other part of the argument - that its track should be valued at less than its replacement cost of around £7bn. A lower valuation would have reduced the amount Railtrack needed to earn to hit its return target and hence its charges to the private operators, who will actually run the trains. The government must hope its modest willingness to offer a 10 per cent return will attract enough bidders for the track operating franchise. The attraction of low initial charges to train operators is limited. They will also need a rate of return long enough to allow for the depreciation of rolling stock. Railtrack could help by meeting the need in its private sector entirely through cutting costs, rather than by raising charges to operators.

Independent's board split over funding options

Continued from Page 1

all the signs are that their preferred candidate for a new partner is Mr Conrad Black, who controls the Telegraph Group, publisher of the Daily Telegraph and the Sunday Telegraph.

Such a deal, involving a 50 per cent of the company, could lead to merging of non-editorial functions. The Telegraph would print the Independent and Independent on Sunday in London and the Newspaper Publishing staff might join the Telegraph in the Canary Wharf offices.

Mr Hay Davison, supported by other Independent directors, believe they have a legal obligation to explore all alternative sources of funding. "We are doing this with a view to proposing arrangements that will produce the best solution for all our shareholders, our readers and staff," Mr Hay Davison said.

One of the main issues is to be the future of non-editorial staff. There are 130 staff shareholders holding in aggregate about 7 per cent of the company. A similar proportion in that held by the main founder, Mr Martin Sulist.

Most are not journalists and many would have their jobs as a result of a deal with another British newspaper. Mr Hay Davison's letter followed an attack by the National Union of Journalists (branch) on the "Dutch auction" of shares and consultation.

FT WEATHER GUIDE

Europe today

Heavy rain combined with freezing morning temperatures will bring miserable conditions in the UK and Low Countries. Showers, possibly with sleet in the north, will remain possible in parts of the North Sea. Heavy rain, with renewed flooding in the Benelux, Germany and northern France, will spread in the afternoon and evening. Snow in the Alps and Pyrenees will be around 1700m in the north. During the night, heavy rain will be expected to spread to the south. Snow will fall temporarily in the Pyrenees with an evening shower. In the afternoon, a new wave of rain will arrive in Ireland, advancing to the British Isles tonight.

Five-day forecast

Most of Europe will be under the influence of a low pressure system. On Sunday the British Isles will be under the influence of a low pressure system. On Tuesday and Wednesday, rain will fall from the low and the pressure will rise. On Thursday and Friday, a high pressure system will bring a cold, dry, and sunny day. A new wave of rain will arrive in Ireland, advancing to the British Isles tonight.

TODAY'S TEMPERATURES

Location	Maximum	Minimum
Abu Dhabi	32	24
Accra	32	24
Algiers	32	24
Amsterdam	10	8
Athens	18	14
B. Aires	28	24
B. East	32	28
Bangkok	32	28
Barcelona	18	14
Beijing	10	8
Belfast	10	8
Belgrade	10	8
Berlin	10	8
Bombay	32	28
Buenos Aires	28	24
Budapest	18	14
Chengdu	10	8
Chennai	32	28
Cairo	32	28
Cape Town	32	28
Cebu	32	28
Cardiff	10	8
Chicago	10	8
Cologne	10	8
D. Salinas	10	8
Dakar	32	28
Dallas	10	8
Delhi	32	28
Dubai	32	28
Dublin	10	8
Durham	10	8
Edinburgh	10	8
Faro	10	8
Frankfurt	10	8
Geneva	10	8
Glasgow	10	8
Hamburg	10	8
Helsinki	10	8
Hong Kong	32	28
Honolulu	32	28
Istanbul	18	14
Jakarta	32	28
Jersey	10	8
Karachi	32	28
Kuala Lumpur	32	28
Kuwait	32	28
La Paz	18	14
Las Palmas	18	14
Lima	18	14
Lisbon	18	14
London	10	8
Los Angeles	18	14
Lyon	10	8
Madrid	18	14
Manila	32	28
Melbourne	18	14
Mexico City	18	14
Miami	18	14
Moscow	10	8
Montreal	10	8
Mumbai	32	28
Nairobi	32	28
Naples	18	14
Nassau	18	14
New York	18	14
Nice	18	14
Osaka	18	14
Ottawa	10	8
Paris	18	14
Perth	18	14
Prague	18	14
Rangoon	32	28
Reykjavik	10	8
Rio	18	14
Riyadh	32	28
Rome	18	14
S. Francisco	18	14
Seoul	18	14
Singapore	32	28
Singapore	32	28
Stockholm	10	8
Strasbourg	18	14
Sydney	18	14
Taipei	18	14
Tel Aviv	18	14
Tokyo	18	14
Toronto	10	8
Turkey	18	14
Vancouver	10	8
Venice	18	14
Vienna	18	14
Warsaw	18	14
Washington	18	14
Wellington	18	14
Zurich	18	14

Situation at 12 GMT. Temperatures maximum for day. Forecasts by Meteo Consult of the Netherlands

Lufthansa Airline

Lufthansa German Airlines

Schroder UK Equity 1st since launch in 1972

Schroder Tokyo 1st since launch in 1981

Schroder Japanese Sm. Cos. 1st since launch in 1984

Schroder UK Enterprise 1st since launch in 1988

Schroder US Smaller Cos. 1st since launch in 1990

Schroder

Little wonder that Schroders have a world-class reputation

Such performance will raise few eyebrows in the circles. After all, a reputation such as Schroders' cannot be built by merely providing impressive short term results. The truth is, Schroders have consistently delivered outstanding performance for many years.

Nor is it an achievement that has gone unnoticed. We now have £4.5 billion under management from those who already know about our track record.

Of course, you may wonder how such an accomplished performance is maintained so consistently.

The reality is that Schroders have a reputation above and beyond those of other organisations. The Group has a staff in 20 countries. Through them we obtain the in-depth research and knowledge which has produced a series of top performing funds.

So our results over the last three, five and ten years will be a little surprise. All of which begs the question. Wouldn't you be better off with Schroders?

For more information on our world-class performance, return this coupon below or call Schroder ClientLine on 0800 526 535.

CALL SCHRODER CLIENTLINE ON 0800 526 535

To: Schroder Unit Trusts Limited, 10018 FRIEST, London

Please send me a copy of "How to Invest in a Schroder Unit Trust"

Name _____

Address _____

Postcode _____ Tel No. _____

Best performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance. The value of investments and the income from them can go down as well as up and the originally invested.

Schroder Unit Trusts Limited is a member of IMRO, LAUTRO & AUTLE.

SCHRODER UNIT TRUSTS

Schroders

Registered at the post office. Printed by St. Clements Press for and published by The Financial Times Ltd, Number One Southwark Bridge, London SE1 1HL. © The Financial Times Ltd, 1993. Reproduction of the contents of this newspaper in any manner is not permitted without prior consent of the publisher. "FINANCIAL TIMES", "FT", "FT-1000" and "FT-1000 INDEX" are trademarks of The Financial Times Group. "FT-1000 INDEX" is a registered trademark of The Financial Times Group.

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

LOTTO/LLOYD'S/SCIENCE

Roll out the barrel for a UK lottery

But the real battles are yet to come, warns Michael Thompson-Noel

Late this year, or early next, Britain's national lottery will start producing millionaire winners, plus a host of other good fortune. Peter Brooke, the national heritage secretary, says the lottery's impact on Britain's quality of life will be considerable, and that it may turn into the world's most successful gamble.

So it flipping well should, for Britain is staggering into the big-time lottery business very late in the day. The first 1826 has Britain had a national lottery.

In the meantime, large-scale lotteries have sprung up everywhere, bestowing sudden and shocking wealth on thousands of players while raising billions in revenue for national governments.

Britain's lagged progress on the lottery front was in opposition by the football pools promoters, whose lucrative business - based on forecasting the results of football matches - is a form of long-odds gambling closely akin to lotteries.

But the case for a UK national lottery distinct from the football pools was always a strong one. The likelihood is that Britain's due date for the big-time Lotto stage will influence the evolution of international gambling - producing, next century, mega-lotteries for planetary good causes.

Britain's national lottery will be job-positive, creating work in the construction, computer and other industries. And costs as a percentage of GDP ought to be sensibly slim.

Peter Davis, the lottery's director-general, is required by law to drive the lottery to the best possible bargain with the operator. It is his job to ensure that the greatest sum possible is delivered to the recipients - charities, the arts, sport, national heritage and the Millennium Fund.

Moreover, the UK lottery is likely to be mounted and operated with state-of-the-art skills. The launch advertising budget will be one of the highest in UK advertising history. And, with a wealth of foreign lottery experience to draw upon, there will be no excuse for Britain's Lotto isn't the most secure and technically advanced operation of its kind.

All's well that ends well on your life. The lottery has already generated great quantities of smoochy chatter, and will generate the same stick-in-the-mud as the football pools. The lottery is descended in everything as "lucky" as a lottery to fund good causes.

Kill-jobs worry about the social consequences - will it spawn a caste system where they can't afford to leave the Lotto's chomping jaws? Even even fret that a big-scale lottery is unfair on the poor, maintaining that the lottery will be subsidising the cultural pursuits of a privileged class. This is particularly woolly-minded.

The government says the lottery "will benefit everyone with an interest in sport, the arts, our heritage, and the benefits from charitable activities." And it ought to be obvious, says economists, that if the "poor" buy most of the tickets, the "poor" will win most of the prizes.

The wrangles to come will be more significant. There could be controversy over the distribution of operator, due by the spring. Bids for the seven-year licence

Richard Branson... under his consortium's proposal, all the lottery's profits would be handed to charity must be submitted by February 14. Various blue-chip consortia are readying to bid, and the battle will be intense.

Had the commercial consortia jostling for the franchise face particularly tricky rivals in William Branson, boss of Virgin Atlantic Airways, and Lord Young, chairman of Cable and Wireless, who have formed the UK Lottery Foundation.

If the foundation won the franchise, it would hand all its profits to charity. Young and Branson are likely to see at least seven rivals. If one of them wins the franchise with a bid more than wholly convincing, there could be uproar.

Branson has claimed that the public would spend an extra £1 on the lottery per week if they knew that all profits were earmarked for charity - though he cannot know that.

On the other hand, in a letter to the FT eight days ago, Branson particularly entrepreneurial venture. Therefore, the question that needs to be asked is: is it really necessary to add an extra layer of shareholders, over the managers, who can sit back and cream off hundreds of millions of pounds of profit that could otherwise be going to good causes?

Forecasts of the lottery's annual turnover range from about £2bn to a fanciful £6bn, with £3.5bn-£4bn the most likely once it is into its stride. Half the money will be given out in prizes while the government - greedily - has stated that it will confiscate 12 per cent of turnover in lottery tax, rather than allocate the maximum sum possible to good causes. The operator's expenses and profits will account for about 13 per cent of turnover, leaving about 35 per cent for spending on good causes.

The biggest disputes are likely to erupt as soon as the lottery is allocated and decisions fall due on allocating the proceeds. The of the non-stop rubbishing that the present-day Arts Council attracts - three multiply by five.

For example, a National Lottery Charities Board will be established, in which lottery funds to charities, and the Queen is appointing a Commission to oversee projects marking the turn of the century. The lobbying and the foaming at the mouth likely to break out over those two bodies knuckle down to business may well swamp customary controversies in sporting, arts and heritage circles. In the end, though, Britain's national lottery will prove exciting and successful, spreading cheer to places where cheer was long thought extinct.

In turn, the evolution of gambling seems likely to gain pace as the communications revolution unfolds. Eventually, trans-national and global lotteries - inevitable - planetary lotteries to save the elephant, famine, or buy Italy.

Lloyd's plans a future with no Names

My feeling is that they are all rot in Hell. I don't want to be treated by Lloyd's," says Hugh Taylor, partner and chairman of the London-based market.

He is one of many Names - individuals who have traditionally been financially crippled by heavy underwriting losses at Lloyd's.

Taylor, like many others, has chosen to accept Lloyd's offer of compensation for his losses or pursuing long and uncertain legal action against his agents.

The move is not good for Lloyd's. "It doesn't seem very brilliant," says Taylor. "It is unlikely I will accept. I have been treated dishonestly and dishonourably and I am entitled to an apology and some compensation for the stress I have suffered."

His names from Gooda Walker syndicates already amount to about £100m. The failure of the settlement will mean that names have to begin actions involving 17,000 Names will continue. This - and the prospect later this year of another £1bn loss when Lloyd's results are reported - is bound to revive speculation about the future of the insurance market.

In spite of these gloomy signs, though, there is a surprising air of optimism at Lloyd's. Underwriters say that trading conditions are among the best they have seen, following increases in rates of up to 40 per cent.

Impressed by a turnaround in the quality of management at Lloyd's and attracted by the promise of bumper profits in 1994, city institutions have invested more than £250m in a dozen new Lloyd's investment trusts in the past three months. Against expectations, Lloyd's capacity - which reflects the strength of the market capital base - will rise to about £10bn this year, the first time it has risen since 1990.

Although 13,000 Names like Hugh Taylor have been forced out of the market since the late 1980s, many of the 10,000 who remain have appetite for comfortable profits in a recovering market.

As fear recedes, hundreds of Names are increasing their commitments. "A quiet confidence is returning to the counties - good business, oh yes, yes, yes," says Robert Wharton, a British solicitor, who organises the Avon and Gloucestershire region of the Association of Lloyd's Members.

Wharton says that the number of Names in the county has fallen but that those who remain intend to increase their commitments this year. The Wharton family lost - Wharton's wife, Fiona, is the Name - has decided to raise its investment, increasing its "line" (amount traded) by about £100m in 1994.

Even though several of the Whartons' friends have lost heavily in Lloyd's in the past few years, little can damp Wharton's optimism.

"There is a tremendous disparity between the popular image and what is actually going on," says one Name, who declined to increase his commitment from £10m to £50m this year.

Robert Saunders, 34, who has been on their Lloyd's affairs for Smith & Williamson, is equally bullish. "I've been scraping together anything I can - I don't want my deposit at Lloyd's," says Saunders, who wants to increase his "line" from £10m to £100m this year. Indeed, some Names who had earlier resigned from Lloyd's have decided to rejoin the market.

"I'd just been out of it. I couldn't see them getting out of trouble," says Daphne Thomson, who was in the London suburb of Southgate and resigned in 1992, only to rejoin a year later. From the formation of new Lloyd's investment trusts was an important factor in her decision. "It gives you a reasonable feeling that the people who know the City are not allergic to Lloyd's."

Philip Gwyn, who founded and now chairs the Charnell Group, a law and relations business, has reversed an earlier decision to resign, rejoining for a four-year stint. A change in the quality of management and clear signs of a turn in the insurance cycle were two of the reasons.

Wharton's optimism and litigation should reinforce these views. While Lloyd's scandal has shaken the market, it has not shaken Lloyd's membership. Names have not been forced to take a much more busi-

Richard Lapper on the aftermath of the losses suffered by syndicate members the market.

"It will be a hard-headed decision taken each year after proper consideration," says Gwyn. Thomson says the days when Lloyd's membership passed down through families - generation by generation - have gone.

"You don't automatically assume you will always be a Name at Lloyd's," says Thomson.

The influx of corporate investment has led some senior figures at Lloyd's to speculate publicly about the future of unlimited liability.

Robert Hiscox, the deputy chairman of Lloyd's, wants to see Names become shareholders in new Lloyd's insurance companies. He says that the market should not have two classes of shareholders and ought to consider whether new unlimited liability should be allowed to join the market at all.

"We have got to go towards limited liability. The question is how do we do it." Unlimited liability "causes a much grief," says Hiscox. "Every 30 years or so we have blown himself out of the water. I just don't want anybody in future to have to sell their homes to meet losses."

Ultimately Names will be the real important. This year only about 10 Lloyd's in the past few years, little can damp Wharton's optimism.

As David James, a Name and leading businessman, said recently: "There is not going to be a new flood of Names. Anno Domini and our losses mean that we are an eroding asset."

Clive Cookson

Big science seeks Wimp

Physics is answering the biggest questions in the origins and future of the universe - depends ultimately on a partnership between scientists working on unimaginably different scales of time and distance. Astronomers and cosmologists are observing and trying to understand matter that stretches billions of years across the other extreme, particle physicists are investigating collisions lasting billions of a second on a scale of billions of a millimetre.

But the two types of scientist enter 1994 in very different moods.

Cosmologists are in a frenzy of excitement, fed by observations from space and from ground-based instruments as they test new theories about the universe boom that brought the universe into existence 15bn years ago. Their sense of anticipation is heightened by last month's repair of the Hubble telescope, which will enable astronomers to see further into space.

Particle physicists, in contrast, are mourning a terrestrial bust. Frustrated from congressional budget cutters forced the US to cancel what would have been their most powerful instrument - the $10bn Superconducting Super Collider - after spending $1.5bn digging the first section of its 56 km tunnel beneath the plains of Texas.

October's SSC cancellation not only deprives physicists of a means of smashing together elementary particles at energies high enough to mimic, on a microscopic scale, conditions near the Big Bang. It also shows that they can no longer count on the US, the world's chief paymaster for big science projects for the past two generations.

It funds ever more expensive machines to dig deeper and deeper into the nature of matter. Instead they have to rely on Europe's more cautious governments - and in particular on Cern, the 19-nation particle physics laboratory near Geneva. The new Cern members must decide whether to pick up the baton and build a new machine.

Cern's proposed Large Hadron Collider is relatively cheap, with an estimated price of about $5bn. That is partly because LHC would be smaller than SSC but mainly because it does not need a main tunnel; it can share the 27 km loop housing Cern's current accelerator, LEP. Whereas LEP smashes together light electrons and positrons, LHC will smash protons - relatively heavy particles - at virtually the speed of light.

Christopher Llewellyn Smith, the Oxford physicist who heads one of the Cern director-general today, estimates that LHC would cost $5bn to build from scratch. Most observers believe that European leaders will agree to fund LHC at the bargain price, though construction may be delayed by arguments to negotiate with US participation.

LHC will smash matter and energy - within an extremely confined space - than any previous event on earth. Some of the energy should manifest itself in the form of elementary particles that generated in the first moments of the universe. The eagerly anticipated "Higgs boson", the particle believed to give all matter its mass.

While particle physicists try to recreate conditions of the Big Bang on earth, astronomers and cosmologists look for direct evidence of the aftermath in the skies. Fortunately they have a much wider range of instruments and greater diversity of data. No single event, even the case of the Hubble space telescope, could have such a devastating effect on astronomy as the SSC cancellation did on particle physics.

Take, for example, the Cosmic Background Explorer satellite had detected "cosmic ripples" of microwave radiation from the young universe - the first signs of the unevenness which gravity later pulled into clusters of galaxies and stars. Since then the observation has been confirmed and extended by several other instruments, operating from the ground and from high-altitude balloons as well as from space.

Consolidating the position of the Big Bang in cosmology, the ripples have helped to support some specific theories about the universe. They fit well with the "inflationary" model, which postulates a super-exponential burst immediately after the Big Bang; random fluctuations during this period, lasting less than one billion billionth of a second, sowed the seeds of unevenness.

The observations are also consistent with a universe precisely balanced between being "closed" and "open". If so, it would maintain exactly the right amount of matter for gravity to stop the universe expanding, after an infinite period of time, but not enough to pull everything back together again eventually in a Big Crunch.

Such a universe, with a "critical density of one", appeals strongly to cosmologists' yearning for mathematical neatness. One practical consequence is that the universe must contain a vast amount of "missing mass" - 10 to 100 times more than all the visible objects (galaxies, stars, dark clouds, comets and so on) combined so far.

Priority for 1994 will be to investigate the nature of this "dark matter". Candidates include ordinary matter in the form of planet-sized Massive Compact Halo Objects; clusters of small dark holes; slow-moving and virtually invisible Weakly Interacting Massive Particles; and neutrinos moving at virtually the speed of light. The smart cosmological theory is backing a combination of these and Wimps.

Clive Cookson

Has the west triumphed?

The traditional Muslim one of the House of War, although in this case the entire Islamic world, with the possible exception of Turkey, has been consigned to the dustbin of history. They believe that the 35 per cent of the world's population, living in the zones of turmoil, will continue much as the philosopher described it in the state of "Poor, nasty, brutish and short." But the prospects of the other 15 per cent, in the zones of peace, are more than bright before. All the most powerful are now democratic. They will not be able to go back to the old ways, and will not fight each other with war.

They will probably not be democratic for very long, but it will be very powerful either. The Soviet Union in Soviet times was the "ability to use ideology and a massive system of political agents, allies, supporters, and sympathisers in programs of economic and political warfare"; and that, argue Singer and Wildavsky, has gone beyond recall.

They will that a country or group in a zone of turmoil might threaten a major city in a zone of peace with clandestine weapons or nuclear destruction ("suicide bombs"). But if such threats or attacks happen, "they would not alter the nature of the international system."

Such a glib dismissal of uncomfortable thoughts is not surprising ily undermine Singer and Wildavsky's argument, which is that we are witnessing a "gradual change in the balance of power, the continuing triumph of quality over quantity, of brain power over muscle power, of mind and imagination over physical resources, of the uncontrolled power of central control and planning." Thus to retain power, states are obliged to be democratic, and democratic states are very unlikely to fight each other.

But do modern states really have to incorporate democratic values? A challenge to such ideas appeared last summer in an article by Samuel Huntington, a doyen of US political scientists, in the magazine Foreign Affairs, entitled "The Clash of Civilisations?". He argues there will be "non-western modern civilisations", which the west will increasingly have to accommodate. The west will approach its own, yet these "values and interests" will differ significantly.

Huntington agrees with Singer and Wildavsky that "military conflict among nations is unlikely, and that a military power is unrivalled." He believes that "to the only Japan has fully succeeded" in becoming modern without becoming western. He qualifies even that statement by saying that "Japan has established a unique position for itself as an emerging member of the west." But he believes there will be major changes in the future, whether or not they take the form of world war, and that the main lines of conflict will be between "civilisations". He even suggests the "Islamic" and "Confucian" civilisations may get together to launch a concerted military challenge to the west.

In response to Huntington's article, pundits ranging from Robert Barley, of the Wall Street Journal, to Liu Binyan, a leading Chinese dissident, reaffirm their confidence in the universal validity of the western liberal model. Barley, interestingly, was the former Singaporean permanent representative to the UN, and Liu Binyan, from whom Huntington first borrowed the formula "the west is the best", is a leading Chinese dissident. Undoubtedly it is the Asian dissident who is coming in, and in commerce - and Singapore has cast itself as an ideological champion. "Heng Hui, another Singaporean ambassador, argues that "democracy is but one virtue in the basket of virtues to be weighed", and complains of "a new found mission in the west to use the imposed category as an international merit test, with democracy hardliners putting on the pressure for change world wide to adopt the democratic model."

'Japan and Asia may achieve more with western ideas than the old west can' more precisely, the "democratic model". Developing economies, the west may benefit from a "postmodernism" of democracy, and when it eventually arrives, Asian democracy must be expected to look different from the western type: it will be less permissive, more authoritarian, stressing the common good rather than individual rights, often with a single dominant party and nearly always a centralised bureaucracy and "strong state".

This was the essence of the position put forward by Asian governments at last June's UN human rights conference in Vienna. It is hotly debated by various non-governmental Asian voices, such as that of Christine Loh, a member of Hong Kong's legislative council (LegCo) who attended the Vienna conference on behalf of the International Commission of Jurists. "The existence of indigenous Asian human-rights movements," she says, "refutes the claim that such rights are a western concept."

Governments in this region would reply that the movements in question are not really indigenous, but by-products of western colonialism. In this special pleading by authoritarian governments on the defensive, or the authentic voice of a rising civilisation that aims to compete with the west?

Perhaps a bit of both. Part of the argument is essentially pragmatic. People like Heng Hui are not disputing that the basic mix of democracy and capitalism is good for Asia in the long run. They are saying (a) that not all democracies have to be exactly alike (which is self-evident) and (b) that they may achieve more with western ideas than the old west can.

The current economic success of China, where capitalism has been democracy has been "postponed" to die, so to speak, may seem a telling point in their favour when compared to the chaos now afflicting Russia, which is trying to swallow both democracy and capitalism at once. But perhaps one should watch both Russia and China a few years longer before making a final judgment. And meanwhile, what about India, where democracy has been practised since a failure for nearly half a century, and capitalism is now going from strength to strength? Certainly the brief interruption of democracy in the mid 1970s did little to advance India's economic development. This argument will run and run.

Even if Fukuyama, Singer and Wildavsky turn out to be right, and western civilisation is the universal model of modernity, that does not mean the present western civilisation will come out on top. Japan and other Asian countries may achieve more with western ideas and institutions than the old west can.

Huntington is clearly on to something when he says that the sense of belonging to a particular civilisation or culture is getting more important in determining how people line up against each other in a given state. That sense was not absent in the past, but it was partially eclipsed by ideological con-licts which now seem to have burnt out. To that extent Huntington is confirming Fukuyama's thesis, not contesting it: no longer is there any idea, people only their group interests left to fight for, and you cannot define group interests without first defining the group.

For although it is very important, in some parts of the world they no longer provide their inhabitants with an all-sufficient sense of identity. You define yourself as belonging to a race, religion or culture, and then try to get the state you live in to reflect that identity and the values that go with it. If the state you live in cannot or will not do that, because it is controlled by another group with a different identity from yours, you are likely to transfer your allegiance to another state, or even try to set up a new one. This is one of the most potent sources of conflict in the world today.

But what is the global "clash of civilisations"? I find that much harder to imagine, and it happens I am reasonably confident, along with Singer and Wildavsky, that something like the modern western civilisation may stay on top. But then I would say, that wouldn't it?

"The Real World Order" (Chatham House Publishers, London, £11.95). "Democracy and Capitalism: Asian and American Perspectives" (Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore).

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

THE FUTURE OF WORK

Job fears are becoming a global concern. Financial Times writers report from Roubaix, in northern France, Bangkok and London

Prepare to man the barricades

There is not much life to be found along the Roubaix Canal these days, particularly on a bitterly cold winter's morning. Viewed from here, the industrial heart of northern France is a grim, ghostly vision, a dark landscape of empty streets and abandoned buildings.

On the canal bank, a man fishes where factory effluent has melted the ice. Shadowy figures move behind the steamy windows of the Café de l'Industrie. All is silent, but for the muffled hum emerging from the Fabrique Leroux mill door.

The mill is not productive. For years it has been inactive, the plant being demolished piecemeal. Inside, a team of Arab immigrant workers are vigorously smashing, pounding, cutting and burning. The work keeps them warm.

But one man stands quietly in the cold, watching the world come banging down around him. He has come to rescue a few timbers from the fire on the factory floor in order to heat his own house.

Nicholas Woodsworth on the plight of French industry

He has lingered to watch the hammers and flames destroy the only kind of work-place and life he knows.

For this destruction he blames the sweatshops of Asia.

In its heyday, the Leroux woolen mill employed 1,200 workers. Along with thousands of other factories, it was the region surrounding Lille the largest and most prosperous in the country. More than half of the country's textiles and clothing came from this one small area on the Belgian border.

Since the early 1980s, however, 75 per cent of the textile mills have vanished; in the past 10 years alone, 110,000 to 120,000 jobs have disappeared. As the mills disappear, the number of unemployed people continues to rise. In the Nord-Pas de Calais region, unemployment resulting from the textile, mining and steel industries now approaches 250,000. Few of the 1,500 textile and clothing plants that remain are untouched by the crisis and the future of Roubaix mill workers, both in work and out, becomes ever less sure.

Roger Glorieux's life has been anything but glorious. His father and grandfather were woolen mill workers. Roger started in Roubaix mills at 11 and stopped 15 years later when the plant in which he was employed as a machine operator closed down.

"At 74, it is hard to see it all go like this," he says. "We worked six days a week and it wasn't a luxury. We bought the things working people today can buy - if something breaks, we just fixed it away and buy new. We used to repair things. But, back then, at least we had work we could count on. You cannot do that today. I liked the life."

Like most in the mill town of Roubaix, Glorieux has an hesitation when asked the reasons for his town's decline. "It is many things but, mostly, it is Asia. Workers there produce everything so cheaply. Salaries are low. Workers get by on a few bowls of rice a day. They do not take holidays. They work six days a week. Raw materials are cheap. Their houses do not have to pay the social charges we have on - pensions, unemployment benefits, paid holidays. Of course they can keep prices down. How can we compete against that?"

But in Glorieux's view, Asian workers partly to the kind of regime Frenchmen followed. "The French government passed legislation for workers in 1936. It also blames European mismanagement. 'It is partly the fault of the French government. They should have put a brake on cheap imports long ago. And now, with the European Union, it is even worse. We cannot control the frontiers; anything can come in."

A battered hand brings a roll-up cigarette to his mouth. "It is also the fault of the bosses. They used to run their businesses like little kingdoms, each one looking after his own interests. They should have worked together. They have worked apart, and it is too late."

The great loss of the mills are over, says Glorieux, with a Gallic shrug. "We do not even wear that much wool any more. We must find other things to do, using the skills we have. My son is a computer programmer. But he is lucky. I feel sorry for the young ones who have nothing ahead of them."

In the whole, his analysis is that of industry and government pundits. Like them, he accepts the need to develop new kinds of jobs, new professions, new industries providing the region with a competitive edge; and, like them, he is not quite sure just what those might be.

The fact is that, with no real solution in sight, most industrialists in France are as anxious to preserve the past as embrace the uncertain future. In the face of unbeatable competition, they assert, the protection of old and ailing industries is the only way jobs can be preserved.

The rules of global trade have become unfair, says Jean-Paul Robert, the secretary-general of GRIT, a regional grouping of textile industrialists. In France, employer-paid social provisions equal the cost of wage bills; in developing countries, they are a fraction of that.

Many non-European textile producers subsidise exports, practise dumping, copy styles and production techniques illegally and get round quotas by illegal imports

Roger Glorieux: 'At 74 it is hard to see it all go like this... I should put a brake on cheap imports long ago' by "Europeanising" products through minimum value added tax. All these practices render French products uncompetitive. In the past four years, imports from Thailand and other Asian countries have grown by 50 per cent; more than half the textiles on the European market are now imported. Worst, complains Robert, a system of unequal tariffs allows foreign cheap goods to European markets but, effectively, bars European producers from foreign markets.

"China is the great competitor of the future. It puts high tariffs on imports and pays its workers next to nothing. Yet it exports cheaply to Europe," he says. "It is unthinkable that we put Frenchmen out of work because of this. We are all for a Gatt agreement provided it is adjusted so the same rules apply to everyone. If it is not, we demand barriers that will protect us."

Suggest to Robert that, for all

Roubaix's suffering, he is advocating... that hinder developments in a global economy, and he will tell you they are not developments the continent of Europe can survive. Suggest that protectionism is out of favour and he counters with his own provocative suggestion. "Trade barriers may seem unfashionable," he says, with a smile, "but wait. It will not be long before they are back in fashion in Europe again."

The Asian rivals to Euromen

European manufacturing workers may think their jobs are threatened by millions of skinny, poorly-paid men toiling in the shops of the East, but their real rivals are much more formidable: Asian workers in modern factories.

In the factories and electronics plants of Asia's cities, as in the rice fields of the Asian countryside, do most of the manual labour.

Thailand's Alucon Manufacturing is no exception. It makes aluminium tubes and aerosol cans for consumer products, including toothpaste, deodorant, K-Y lubricating jelly, duplicating ink, glue and instant gaskets. Most of the management technicians at Alucon's factory are the outskirts of Bangkok are men, but most of the workers are women. Annuwan Punsak, 45, is employed by the company, where she inspects the final product before it leaves the plant. On the day of my visit the factory had been making Colgate toothpaste (by impact extrusion) and painting them by machine for the Thai market.

Like many of her European counterparts, Annuwan is entitled to 30 days' sick leave a year. She has been off sick? "Never," she replies.

Hartmut Schneider, managing director of the factory, is a firm believer in the value of his employees. "Women in Thailand are much better than men," he declares. "They are much more 'with' the job, they are more loyal, they are more interested in keeping the job. They think about what they are doing. They are interested in producing something beautiful. We have many employees, especially women, who have been sick a single day in five years."

Many of the clichés about Asian workers are true: they are hard-working (doing up to 12 hours overtime a month); they are loyal; and they earn less than their western counterparts. The legal minimum daily wage in the Bangkok area is 10 baht (23.30), and the German-born Schneider reckons the 850-strong workforce at his plants account for about 23 per cent of total costs, compared with as much as 50 per cent in European factories.

But there is much more than cheap labour in the success of companies such as Alucon. Although Alucon took advantage of a shortage of capacity in the west and exports most of its products to Europe and the US, its main market is in the booming economies of China and south-east Asia.

"A lot of the industries that use our containers have relocated to this part of the world and it's logical that they are looking for local suppliers," says Schneider. "You have a huge increase in demand for consumer products."

Alucon is meeting this demand for quality goods not - as jealous European workers might believe - by employing cheap labour, but by mechanising plants as it expands. That is the reason why capital depreciation is Alucon's main expense.

Thai workers are five times as expensive as those in China, Vietnam and Indonesia, and complex machines are needed to produce the quality consistency required by such as Colgate.

Alucon's factory in Bangkok is a sweatshop. The workers are at the end of a machine, loading it, or at the other, packing the finished product into boxes.

As Asian workers become wealthier and their industries become mechanised, their hopes and concerns begin to sound more like those of western counterparts. Thailand, just like European countries before it, stands to lose hundreds of thousands of manual jobs in the textile

Victor Mallet finds women in modern factories pose a formidable threat

Industry is mechanisation and to competition from lower-paid workers elsewhere in Asia.

Workers at the Alucon plant, often migrants from farming districts in the north-east, say they like the job security and benefits of working for a large but friendly company. They worry about traffic jams and paying the rent.

Benjawan Prayadsap, aged 19, moved to the factory five months ago to find regular work. An unsteady job in a cake shop. Wearing jeans and a casual shirt, she is putting rubber bands on a plastic bag with her fingers. "There's nothing in my dreams," she says on being questioned about her ambitions. "I just want to work and make money for the future."

Many of the women workers have started to listen to music through the headphones of their personal machines, prompting Schneider to worry that they may distract them and reduce their work rate.

Engineers and skilled workers, in short supply in Thailand, are already almost as expensive as their European equivalents. "They are getting spoilt in a similar fashion to workers in Europe, where people try to work as little as possible and get as much money as possible," says Schneider.

Attitudes to leisure in Asia and the west are converging, too. "I think American-style," says a cheerful Choompol Veeravutvatana, assistant general manager. "Work is work and relaxing is relaxing."

Perhaps it is time to discard the myth of the nauseatingly diligent Asian worker. Asked what he liked to do in his spare time, Choompol replied: "I like to go out with my friends and get drunk."

If it had not been for that damned... course, the question need never have bothered us. The only work in our lives... would have been a bit of light gardening. In the event, the work question has bogged us since, albeit in different ways.

Right now, for instance, it is worrying political leaders in the form in which it threatened to unseat their English predecessors in the French Revolt of 1931. The trouble there was too much work for a plague-thinned labour force, whereas the contemporary version is not enough to go-round.

What makes it no less of a danger

Prospects look rosier for the rebels ger today's politicians is that the problem has shifted from peasants to floating masses higher up the social scale. That is particularly so in Britain, where in the recession, managerial as well as manual class have lost their jobs.

Hence, if you happen to be job seeking, the outlook will depend much on which kind of worker you are. The question of work prospects is never easy to answer, but it lies in the three basic types of worker identified by the US psychologist Albert Bernstein: rebels, believers, and competitors.

Rebels are typically expert in some technical field, and are creatively intelligent. The drawback is that, while toiling unthinkingly at things they are interested in, they have little time for routine and still less for "people problems". They are apt to be a mixed blessing as colleagues, and an almost pain as managers.

The best rebels - from the viewpoint of the working for them - are believers. Believers being fair-minded, they spare no effort even at tasks they dislike, fuelled by their faith that labour will bring its reward. Alas, the same faith blinds them to all evidence to the contrary, which they rarely see beyond middle management.

The types who tend to get to the top are competitors who believe in winning personally. They swiftly learn how their organisation's system really operates, as opposed to the way it is supposed to, and manipulate it in their own self-interest. Even so, their political astuteness makes them adept at outwitting rival companies as well as colleagues, and at wringing good deals from customers.

If competitors are out of work, therefore, it is probably because they are too good for their own good, or in their last job they came up against a canny competitor. The good news is that there will always be a demand for competitors' drive and fixing skills.

That inevitably means bad news for the other two types, and especially so for believers. For one thing, the scrapping of whole ranks of middle management means that those who just losing it to competitors have far less chance of even entering it.

The irony for believers is that, although civilisation would crumble without their sterling abilities, it is harder and harder to get paid for using them. In Britain at least, the best hope of a revival of the industry, where their qualities count much more than in service operations such as investment banking, hairdressing and

The best prospects would be for rebels, provided their technical skills and creativity keep pace with the times. There will always be a demand for their problem-solving as a self-employed worker.

The only trouble is that self-employment places a high premium on the routine tasks and people-handling abilities for which rebels typically have little skill or talent. So for many, the way ahead could be stony... unless they are in the lucky position of this particular rebel, whom the question "What is the future of work?" presents no difficulty. The answer is 10 days. Roll retirement!

Michael Dixon

As They Say in Europe/James Morgan

Is Europe just out of breath?

"From the economic point of view, we in the Federal Republic have always moved forward up to now. Prosperity has risen from year to year. Now we are in an economic crisis. Is this a turning point, or have we just reached a standstill, a breathing space, after which we shall move forward again?"

That was a question in a poll of the state of German opinion. Once a month the Germans are asked about everything by the Allensbach organisation. These days they are impressed. But the real interest is that someone has asked the question that underlies discussion about almost everything. Is this a breathing space or a turning point? In Germany, 57 per cent replied positively, saying the "crisis" was just a pause. That it represented a fundamental change was accepted by 27 per cent.

Have British readers noted the of the "crisis"? It turns up in many news pages in Germany and France, Italy and Spain. But I cannot remember at any time in the past 100 years bad years in Britain were referred to as a "crisis". This is because the British have become used to a lower standard of performance than the Germans, Italians, French and many others.

Imagine a British pollster asking respondents if they thought that current difficulties represented merely a pause in the ever upward progress of the British economy.

Anyway, the Germans believe, by a margin of more than 2:1, they are not at a turning point. They may because the past two years have been flat, dull and awful. The period began with the start of the Yugoslav catastrophe, was punctuated by the arrival of Bill Clinton in the White House and ended with the conclusion of the Gatt Round.

The Germans with the three years alone should reinforce the "breathing space" theory, for the frenetic pace of events of 1989-91 was unsustainable.

The apparent uneventfulness of the present by German eyes equates to tranquility. The "crisis" breeds angst and morose. The Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung headlined the results of the Allensbach poll like this: "In the downturn, the Germans pull in their horns."

The French, once so anxious to cut a dash, now confess their timidity and insularity. Le Monde wrote that both France and Germany are experiencing an identity crisis. The article concluded with the words: "Misunderstanding between one country and another leads to mutual distancing and creates the illusion that there exists a national capacity to master shared crises."

Meanwhile, France speak of Italy as a friend. Spain has found it possesses no resources to confront the possibility, once the industrial impacts of the last two or three decades roll away, there is nothing to replace them. To the east, the morose Magyars and paranoid Poles cast a wary eye over the benefits of liberalisation, which are more real than they believe, while the Balkans return to Bismarck's nightmare characterisation - the place where some damn fool can trigger a European war.

This prevailing gloom is not a global phenomenon: it is very European. It is reflected in marked loss of European self-confidence, which historically has occurred only in the face of American or Japanese achievement. But now Europe is plagued with visions of what Le Figaro charmingly called Asiatic ants. The new industrial nations of south-east Asia, many believe, are going to steal our jobs and dominate the world of work with sweatshop industries. Countless lessons have been drawn from this belief, but always the wrong ones.

They include the idea that, in order to compete, wage levels must be cut, and that economic growth is founded on sweatshop economics and rights for workers. So, say European leaders of opinion, outside Britain, if that is the way to succeed, we do not want to know about it.

But what they fall, churlishly, to recognise is that the economies of the Far East have been gained through positive achievement rather than systematic exploitation of specific advantages.

This achievement is based on simple ideas - such as not subsidising loss-making state-owned juggernauts, and a preparedness to make policy U-turns. This includes pulling out of heavy industries, as in Korea, or reversing the thrust of social programmes, as in Malaysia.

The approach is not driven by capricious whims, but by recognising that times change and different solutions are needed. Europe must ask whether it will be the breathing space in which we run out of breath, or whether European governments learn from those whom they despise and fear.

I started with a question: will I finish with a question? In 1993, did you read any interview with those in charge of the world's most successful economies?

James Morgan is economics correspondent of the FTC World Service.

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

HOW TO SPEND IT

A simpler, more elegant design on life...

The design industry is forsaking the superficial, elitist style of the 1980s says Lucia van der Post

There have been points in the wind for a long time. The design industry has been wound down by the biggest economic boom since the war. One of the most surprising casualties of the recession turned out to be the design industry. As it had always been, the design industry was just what we needed to lead us out of the recession. This was superficially very true. In fact it was the design industry that had been the design industry for a long time. It was large it had been in what it was supposed to be good at - tapping into the psychology of society, meeting its needs, being a proper and everything was put out of reach of large numbers of the community. One only to think of once utilitarian, functional items which were so designed and packaged as to put them beyond the reach of many who might need them - Alessi kettles, Philippe Starck lemon squeezers, Versace silk shirts, designer-labelled handbags - to realise the truth of what he says. In many cases the redesign of an item as a technical improvement - an Alessi kettle functions as well as a Russell Hobbs but it became a cult object because of its superficial styling and high price.

The designer FHK Henrion joined in the debate, attacking the notion of design as a tool for "the happy few" of a moneyed minority, declaring that "the designer's place in the economy is of crucial importance but his place in society is no longer so".

While many of us in the world were engaged in a merry spending spree much of the third world looked on aghast - not just with disapproval at our frivolous ways but also filled with awe at how these riches might overwhelm their own culture and way of life. Whitley quotes Antonio Charlot, adviser to India's National Institute of Design, saying that he sees the common denominator in design from the world as "one of affluence and obsolescence, the Design for the true minimalist.

There is a direct link, Whitley points out in a thoughtful book on the subject between a society's design and its social health: design is a manifestation of the social, political and economic situation.

What happened in the UK in the 1980s is that design let us down. It began in deal in shallow, more ephemeral precepts and came to stand for what Whitley calls "professional middle-class taste masquerading as ethically superior 'good taste'". So even though the recession had a huge part to play in the decline of the status of design and designers, there was much, much more to it than that. It was not just that many of us had run out of money. It was a rejection of what the design industry stood for, for the values we thought it projected.

Not of course, that it is fair to blame the design world alone. Several designers and design writers have been deeply concerned about their role and where current practice was taking them, long before the recession began. Whitley quotes Jeremy Myerson, a design writer, saying that design had come to be seen as a "weapon of exclusivity, of segmentation - the means by which many desirable goods catering to the minimalist which spell high profit... the concept of need is... replaced with the image of design as the five-star lifestyle."

He also quotes the splendid economist-philosopher EF Schumacher: "What is at stake is not economics but culture; and the standard of living but the quality of life." In other words, it is hard to overstate the role of designers - how very much it matters that they get it right and how deeply we all let down when they get it wrong.

What we see around us

Muji (which stands for 'no brand quality goods' in Japanese) has long foreshadowed the simpler but still beautiful life. Its shops (39 Shelton St, London, WC2; 26, St. Marborough St, London W1; and 63-67 Queen Street, Glasgow G1) are a testament to usefulness, value and real aesthetic discipline. Photographed here is a sample of their clean, streamlined approach.

is not just people who are less well off than they were, but people who view the world differently. It is not just that we have had a decline in the ability of the design industry to provide the solutions, the industry has been perceived to be part of the problem, perpetuating values we no longer accept.

In our daily lives all of this is expressed, often at a subconscious level, in a feeling of simpler things and simpler ways of living. And this is expressed not just in the houses but in the aspects of our lives. On the shelves front the Brenda Polan reports here) the old formality has been washed up, lightness, a lack of stiffness is all. And so it is in interiors. Who, for instance, could have imagined, in the middle of the 1980s, that a book of books on the home - I wrote last June) would be a runaway success? Who would have imagined in the minimalist world of interior design, where the excesses of the 1980s were most emblematic, that simple guides purveying the idea that modest things can give pleasure and be just as useful as expensive things, would prove to signal a serious new direction?

Chic Simple provides the manuals, the visual inspira-

From Jocasta Jones' book The Thrifty Decorator (£15.99, Conran Octopus), a bedroom of charm put together from simple ingredients.

tion, as well as the hard practical information for this way of living. It is on quotations from almost all the design greats. Here we have Elsie Wolfe, the gifted American interior decorator (perhaps it is relevant to note that she began her career as an interior decorator around the turn of the century when many were beginning to tire of musty, over-crowded Victorian interiors): "When I am asked to decorate a room, my first thought is proportion. Always I keep in mind the importance of simplicity."

Simplicity should not be confused with austerity. "Light, air and comfort - these things I must always have in a room," she said. "We must learn to recognise suitability, simplicity, and proportion, and apply our knowledge to our needs."

Simple should not mean dull. Elsie Wolfe, for instance, was a fan of restraint as well as panache. At the time, it seems, her rooms were considered practically barren in comparison to the turn-of-the-century norm and looking at photographs of them they seem to me to exude a high glamour that no over-stuffed Victorian interior ever had.

Simple should mean fewer things and better quality and above all should mean to be used with cheerfulness. In the Chic Simple book on clothes tribute is paid to many classics that qualify as simple but are certainly not cheap. The Trench Coat - the Burberry, of course, which is reeking of "espionage, mystery, intrigue" and billing along with the humble T-shirt, denim, flared blazer, the plimsoll and the cashmere. "Cashmere is a tempting investment, as it provides control without bulk and is luxurious".

This is a philosophy, an approach to living that transcends time barriers. Elsie Wolfe, born in 1890, would have perfectly at home with the Riley, Director of Architecture and Design at New York's Museum of Modern Art who believed "An anonymously good design is much as an Alvar Aalto vase." And both of them would have been with Micky Drexler, president of The Gap, when he said "Good design should be something extra."

Josephine Fairley asks the style professionals how to make the very most of the New Year sales and how to avoid costly mistakes

This is the season when the bargain-hunting sorts of those shoppers worthy of Olympic medals from the tourists. Like the former, rifling calmly through the racks of discounted garments, wish-list clasp in hand, while the other keeps a sensible grip on the credit card. The rest of us look frenzied and get excited over fashion follies which lived to haunt their designers - and will soon do the same for us.

One New York shopper I know knows her credit card in the during the sales. Should she fall in love with an item, she returns home and waits for her Amex to defrost. If it still seems a good idea, she returns back to the shop and buys her quarry.

I asked style professionals about their strategies for bargain hunting and their best and worst buys.

Thelma Di Nora, personal shopping manager, Harvey Nichols
My best buy was a Donna Karan ivory V-neck crepe blouse, down from £225 to around £65, which looked nothing on the hanger but fabulous when I tried it on.

My worst buy was a beautiful pair of Betty Black leather boots for half-price - around £50. I thought I was being terribly clever because they had a skirt suit I'd bought from her, but they were so heavy in the calves I looked like I was wearing a skirt. Trying things on is essential, even in a sale. It is wearing the right outfit in a shop in a body, trousers and a soft top, slip-on shoes the night you'd wear with trousers - and definitely tight, not baggy. Don't ever take your partner. You may gain a bargain, but lose a relationship.

John Morgan, associate editor
My best buy was a huge alpaca teddy bear coat by Richard James, which seemed to my ankles and could accommodate several of me. It's a splendid security blanket and wonderfully warm.

My worst mistake was in Paris, when I got confused by continental sizing and managed to buy a pair of shoes a whole size too small. I did try them on, but didn't frogmarch up and down like you should - it was a real case of fever. Fortunately I was able to find a Cinderella who they fitted, and I loved them on.

Ask yourself whether you would want to buy the item if it was full price - because something is only a bargain if you get a lot of wear out of it. I approach sales with caution and find them good hunting grounds for knits and knitwear.

Nicola Jeal, editor, Elle
My best buy is a pair of Manolo Blahnik purple suede riding boots, £100 down from £300. They are incredibly comfortable. My worst buy is a pair of Manolo Blahnik turquoise suede riding boots, from the same sale, but a size smaller. I made the mistake of thinking I could stretch them. They're crippling tight.

I always take a small mirror with me, so that I can check the back view of everything I try on.

Do not take your partner to the sales. You may gain a bargain but lose a relationship

Caroline Jones, contemporary fashion buyer, Liberty
My best buy was a grey wool Workers For Freedom short pleated skirt, half price at £30, which I got two winters ago and I've worn it ever since. It has an elasticated waist, so it's incredibly comfortable.

My worst buy was a Donna Karan jacket, in pink - a colour I never normally wear, and which became instantly dated. It cost around £175, down from £300. It's still sitting unworn in my wardrobe.

Do not buy things that are incredibly fashionable because they are so quickly. Go for several seasons and months, or look at the upcoming season's fashions (in magazines) to help identify something on the rails that you'll want in your wardrobe rather than later.

John R. White, fashion editor, The Times
My best buy was a trio of linen trousers, bought for £50 each in a Gap shop in New York, in banana, sky blue and a Madras plaid. My worst buy was a Byblos silk shirt, reduced to £200 in the Harvey Nichols sale. It was cream and black with huge red flowers and looked wonderful until I put it on. (The friend I gave it to was very pleased, though).

Always try things on, rather than go by the tag - even if the label says it's a medium, that may be a mistake.

Sophie Laybourne, Daily Telegraph fashion writer

My best buy was an Aquascutum 40-style fake beaver hat, which I picked up in Harrods' sale for around £100 - down from about £250 - long before fake fur became trendy. It was unbelievably warm, and looked so like the real thing that, heart-breaking, it was eventually stolen off the back of my head one dark night. I wore it on often. I know it as The Beaver.

My worst buy was a Rialto Ozbek jacket, when he first became fashionable and everyone - from the Princess of Wales down - was wearing his stuff. I bought it in Browns in South Molton Street and it cost around £400 even in the sale. It was an ultra-fashionable and had been widely photographed that by the time the weather was right to wear it again it was very identifiable. Last Year's Jacket. I was going to a wedding and I was young and in love and wanted to appear desperately chic, but instead looked like something out of Dynasty.

Do not shop in sales when - for love or any other reason - you're feeling terribly pleased with yourself, because you tend to think you look fabulous in anything.

Caroline Baker, fashion editor, Good Housekeeping
My best buy was a £30 Ralph Lauren blue-out yellow paisley silk skirt, a perennial classic I wore constantly. My worst was a Yohji Yamamoto brown pleated jacket, cut out of one piece of fabric, terribly unstructured at a time when everyone was into the 1980s executive look; I rather regret getting rid of it, now that everything's more structured again. At least I didn't waste much money - it was about £10 on the last day of the sale.

Lisa Nelson, chairman, P.H. Unlimited
My best buy was a blue suede Gucci jacket, which was outrageously priced before the sale but became affordable at around £200. My worst was a pair of purple Aseline Ala stretch trousers, which I got in Browns for £100 and never wore. I'd always wanted something by Ala but I made the classic sales mistake of being seduced by the designer label, without asking myself whether I'd ever wear it.

Lowri Turner, fashion editor, Evening Standard
My best buy was a Jasper Conran black knit wrap.

Continued on Page V

THERE IS ONLY ONE SALE PREVIEW.

On Saturday, 1st January an exclusive Harrods Account Customers Sale Preview Day will be held in the Furniture and Carpet Departments on the Third Floor and in Radio and TV and Major Household Appliances on the Second Floor. This will enable all Account Customers to view in advance some of the bargains on offer when the sale begins on Wednesday 5th January. Harrods Account Customers will be able to order certain sale goods prior to the start of the sale and then take advantage of the extra 10% saving on the Account Customer Day on 8th January.

If you do not already have an Account then simply visit our two Customer Account Stations in the Record Department, Second Floor and the Cane Furniture Department on the Third Floor, with proof of identification and address. Our staff will be on hand to process your application straight away. Account opening is subject to status. Full written details are available on request.

THE WHOLE STORE WILL BE OPEN ON SATURDAY 1ST JANUARY FROM 10AM TO 6PM.

SALE COMMENCES WEDNESDAY JANUARY 5TH 9AM TO 8PM.
SALE OPENING HOURS: 6th and 7th 9am to 7pm, 8th 9am to 8pm.
From January 10th Mondays, Tuesdays and Saturdays 10am to 6pm. Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays 10am to 7pm.
Saturday January 29th 9am to 7pm.

Harrods

Harrods Ltd., Knightsbridge, SW1X 2NL. Telephone: 071-730 1231.

The Austin Reed Sale Now On.

Skidaddle over!

The Austin Reed SALE for Men and Women is Now On. We look forward to seeing you.

Men	Women
Wool jacket £119.00 NOW £59.00 Wool jacket £119.00 NOW £59.00 Cashmere shirt £119.00 NOW £59.00 Cashmere shirt £119.00 NOW £59.00	Cashmere shirt £119.00 NOW £59.00 Cashmere shirt £119.00 NOW £59.00 Cashmere shirt £119.00 NOW £59.00 Cashmere shirt £119.00 NOW £59.00

AUSTIN REED
REGENT STREET AND COUNTRY

BREITLING 1884

INSTRUMENTS FOR PROFESSIONALS

BREITLING CHRONOGRAPHS
In 1884 Leon Breitling began building sophisticated timepieces. For over one hundred years now, the same meticulous craftsmanship has been built into every Breitling watch.

As a tribute to these early days, we are launching a special exhibition of antique Breitling Chronographs and Aviation instruments will be on display in the following during the dates listed.

EXHIBITION LOCATIONS AND DATES
York: Harpers, 24 Market Lane 6 April - 4 May
The Watch Gallery, 101 Piccadilly SW1 6 May - 16 May Cheltenham: Booths, 70 The Parade SW1 16 May - 2 June
Glasgow: Mappin & Webb, 47 Vincent Street 10 June - 23 June Canterbury: Walker & Hall, 5 Bow Lane 10 June - 11 July Mappin & Webb, 12-14 St Ann Street 15 July - 25 July

Dinner for a FIVE

CLOSING DOWN
END OF LEAS HAND MADE OF CARPETS & O
80% OFF
GENUINE REDU

...with a hint of tasteful deconstruction

A high-contrast, black and white photograph of a person standing outdoors. The person is wearing a dark, long-sleeved top and dark pants. They are looking directly at the camera. The background is bright and textured, possibly a wall or a large rock formation.

PLANNED BY Yoshi TANIUCHI

Lots of layers from Comme des Garçons beige, soft, warm brown, dark navy, blue and black. The new collection calls for interesting textures and a softness which denies all hard edges. This summer you will believe a woman can float.

Photographs by Chris Moore

CLOSING DOWN SALE
(END OF LEASE)
HAND MADE ORIENTAL CARPETS & RUGS
80% OFF
GENUINE REDUCTIONS

HUGE STOCK OF PERSIAN (TURKISH SILK)
KASHMIR & TRIBAL RUGS ■ CARPETS

ALL STOCK MUST BE CLEARED REASONABLE OFFER WILL NOT BE REFUSED

OPEN SUNDAY 11.00am to 5.00pm
WEEKDAYS 9.30am to 6.00pm
(LATE NIGHT THURSDAY TILL 7.00pm)
BELGRAVE CARPET GALLERY LTD
3 OLD BOND STREET
LONDON W1 (Piccadilly end)

Tel:- 071-499 6149
Fax:- 071-498 2496

the way to the hill.

My worst buy was more recent, in Rayne: they had comfortable little flared slacks for $50, returned from $20, and although I only needed black I got a bad case of the Imelda Marcoses, and bought four other pairs in different colours - which I'll never wear.

My latest advice: the best shops have the best deals.

■ Mark Sullivan, fashion director, Esquire: I paid around $100 for my best buy, a Paul Smith Shetland sweater of the kind you had when you were about three. It's donkey-coloured, nicely scratchy and incredibly warm.

My worst buy was a suit from Rees, which I paid about $120 five some years ago; and the suit was great but I made the fatal mistake of not taking it to the dry-cleaning to check the colour. When I put it home, it was a ghastly khaki and it still looks like a murderer.

Pause and think before you buy: it will fill a gap in my wardrobe, so I said it.

■ John Marsh, fashion editor, Country Life: My worst buy was a $400 velvet skirt.

Neville public relations: My best buy was at The Woolen Mill, a costume sale shop in St Andrew's. I picked up a huge cashmere throw for about $150 that would easily have cost $200 in London.

My worst buy was a pair of $100 glittery earrings bought in a store on Madison Avenue. They looked brilliant and daring in dynamic New York but were over-the-top in London, they were simply over-the-top.

It's vital to act on a recommendation in mission: you don't then fall in love with the first other thing you see and regret it further down the street.

■ Jackie Modlinger, fashion director, Daily Express: My best buy was a Ralph Lauren pin-striped short skirt, which I bought last summer in their sale for $20 when I realised I had a short skirt and was going to need a cinchback. I bought a Ralph Lauren suit I'd bought earlier in the season (which had a long skirt and a cinchback) making the suit more versatile.

Go for a designer label that you've always coveted and never allowed rather than cheap labels that have been around down further.

KINGCOME SOFAS SALE
Starts Saturday 8th January at 304 Fulham Road.
SW10 9EP. 20% discount on new orders of our bespoke furniture and fabrics when purchased together.
Delivery approx 8 weeks
Tel: 071-351 3998

A Barn Full of Sofas and Chairs

Specialists in antique, period ■■■ good ■■■■ sofas, chairs and dining chairs.
Skilled craftsmen for upholstery and loose-covering.
■■■ top fabrics supplied
■■■ design consultants incorporating antique furniture

Furnace Mill, Lamberthorst, Kent TN3 8LH (0892) 890285

UP TO
50% OFF
AT SIMPSON'S SALE.
(100 GENEROUS BY HALF.)

At Simpson's Winter stretches all the way from 10AM-6PM Sale the ~~season~~ of goodwill 27th December to 29th January. With prices cut by up to a half on DAKS and other quality men's and women's ~~wear~~ it seems our generosity knows no bounds. You ~~can~~ ~~even~~ get 30% discount on famous designer names like Guy Laroche, Betty Barclay and Fenn Wright and Manson. So come to Simpson's Sale before ~~you~~ ~~run~~ ~~out~~ ~~of~~ ~~our~~ ~~stock~~

FROM OUR LADIES' RANGE	WERE NOW	FROM OUR MEN'S RANGE	WERE NOW
DAKS duffle coats	£265 £129	DAKS blazers	£299 £149
DAKS jackets	£289 £139	DAKS suits	£399 £199
Domina two pieces	£259 £159	DAKS trousers	£99 £69
Pringle cashmere sweaters	£132.50 £90	Cotton business shirts	£39.95 £29.95

Simpson Piccadilly Winter Sale. 203 Piccadilly, London, W1. From Monday 27th December.
DAKS Sale. 183 Sloane Street. Open Mon - Sat 10 am - 6 pm. Weds 10 am - 7 pm.

Simpson
071-734 2002 ICCADILLY

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

FOOD AND WINE

1,000 free dinners – or lunches – for two

No such thing as a free lunch? Oh yes there is, says former restaurateur and FT food writer Nicholas Lander

L January 1 persuaded me to have a lunch for a fivepence during the fortnight at the end of the month. It was a tremendous success with our members, and more surprisingly, with most of the restaurants.

This year we are planning something even better. We are offering 1,000 free lunches (or dinners) for 1994. And all you have to do to qualify is accept a free card which entitles you to a 25 per cent discount on food and drink at any restaurant in our scheme for 12 months.

Too good to be true? There really is such a thing as a free lunch? In this scheme there are no concealed costs, conditions or strings attached for the six months. Thereafter, if you find the card and want to keep it, an annual fee of £35 will be charged by Transmedia, the company which is operating the scheme.

Even if you have paid this fee, you may return your membership and get your money back at any time within the six months.

The Financial Times decided to become involved in the launch of the scheme in the UK because we are convinced it offers an excellent deal for our readers, especially as I have been involved in the initial selection of restaurants.

So how, exactly, does it work?

The full details and application form for the Financial Times/Transmedia restaurant card, will be published in the next Weekend FT on January 8 with the names of all the UK restaurants which have joined the scheme (more than 100 so far). No money will be required.

The 1,000 lunches will be offered in the form of 1,000 credits worth £50. We will ballot all those who use the card on Monday January 24 to Friday February 11. Every time you use the card your name goes into the hat, so if you eat out a lot and are lucky you could win more than one free lunch. There is no limit on how many credits any one reader may win. And there will be no losers, for everyone who uses the card will receive the 25 per cent discount.

You need not have just any credit or charge card, but you must have an Access or Visa card in order to be able to apply for the Financial Times/Transmedia card. Once the application is processed (up to 14 days), you will receive a directory of all the 1,000 American restaurants which accept the card and a separate listing of all the UK restaurants which have joined our promotional scheme. The more British restaurants join we will publish their names.

How does it work? Very simply. The FT/Transmedia charge card will be active from the moment you receive it and can be used at any participating restaurant.

This amount will then appear on your next Access or Visa statement, together with a credit for 25 per cent of the amount you have spent on food and beverages. Service and VAT charges do not attract a discount.

What type of restaurants will be on the list?

The full range, from casual to formal, is being selected for the family to eat the weekend, including wine bars and hotel dining rooms. There will be no fast food outlets. The majority of restaurants will be in London but there are already 25 restaurants on the list outside London in Bath, Bristol, Edinburgh, Exeter, Manchester and Southampton.

And, most importantly, the FT/Transmedia card will be an integral and valuable tool for anyone travelling on business or pleasure.

You can apply for the FT/Transmedia card from anywhere outside the UK and use it within the next six months on your next business trip to London. Or to Boston, New York, Chicago, Palm Beach, Florida, Los Angeles or San Francisco.

Almost. Find out the full details from next Saturday's Weekend FT.

Breads may be the new year food fad but, as this 19th century painting shows, its appeal has not diminished down the ages

The bread's the thing

In cookery, as in other things, there are booms and busts, and the wheat factor in food is no exception.

The kiwi fruit, with its brown fruit and its brilliant jet and silver-coloured plumage, had been a minor foodie fad before it became the darling of degenerated nouvelle cuisine – instantly earning its southerly reputation as a gourmet at top tables. So passé is the kiwi fruit now that even country pubs allegedly serving "good pub grub" are likely to stop short of using it to garnish their micro-waved Tex-Mex and deep-frozen red snappers.

Other fresh ingredients have come in and out of fashion recently: dwarf corn and mangetout peas. Good riddance to the corn: the ones I have sampled have been tasteless. As for the mangetout, like the kiwi fruit it was just too pretty for its own good. And now when it is not it defied the Trades Descriptions Act – with all those inedible seeds at the seams it ought to have been called mangomolia.

The same goes for kumquats: as the wane but the onslaught of the ubiquitous sun-dried tomato seems to have subsided, and I feared suffocation at Christmas. I had a packet of fancy filo parcels – pouches, purses and cushions crammed with mince, meat and nutmeg filling.

The red meat mince seems destined to go on decreasing. The once popular mince pie is the only one that will probably be years before top quality British mince and well-cured hams are the norm and caul, pig tails, trotters and Bath chaps are readily available again.

But in the garden, in the poultry, chicken and turkey are still the mainstay. Guinea fow and now even more alluring than quail. Goose and duck are still the thing with confits taking over from magrets as the main item of the menu.

As for fish, diver and line-caught sea bass words now, and pickled herring looks to pick up nicely.

English mulberry vinegar and prune vinegar from France earning pride of place in smart larders.

I cannot see that Italy will lose its lead in the food fashion stakes for a long while yet but the cuisines of south-west France, Portugal and Turkey are all looking healthy and growing stronger. That cooking, fragrant with lemongrass and star anise, however, meanwhile on the brink. Will it boom or will it not?

Pasta mania is getting out of hand. Pizza is giving way to polenta. But breads are big news for '94, says Philippa Davenport from salted anchovies to lightly cured herring. The olive oil boom, which began with French and Italian extra virgin, is now spreading its wings across the Atlantic. Olive oil has been already used to make olive oil.

I love olive oil but think it is time to rebalance the balance a little and remember how delicious good butter can be. Butter is after all the fat of the earth and small local dairies making it in Britain with care and support are lavishing us freely on estate buttered olive oils.

Vinegars, like oils, continue to rise in popularity with properly aged balsamic vinegar from Modena, sherry vinegar from Jerez, in some circles. But it is on the up and breads are very big news. The success of focaccia and focaccia was exceptional but the general trend in bread is set fair.

Whole sourdough, appealing to a minority market with its darker, sourer taste, is gaining ground. Whole British breads – pumpernickel, Lincolnshire plum bread, barley bannocks, Aberdeen rows and co – are enjoying a new winning streak.

BREAKFAST BREAD (makes 2 small loaves)

Here is a bonus bread recipe in the ascendancy and are the foods of south-west France, where the bread comes from.

Take a cup of prune stud this dough. Beat Grey provides the liquid element. Cinnamon and sugar are complete the mixture. Breakfast bread can be made carefully but I prefer in a little just as it is, without any sugar or marmalade, with my early morning cuppa.

1 In unbleached white bread flour, preferably stone ground; 1 x 7 a packet of easy-blend yeast; 8 oz large, squishy prunes; 1 pt very milky milk; 2 eggs; 2 oz butter; 1½ oz brown sugar; 1½ tsp ground cinnamon; 1 teaspoon finely grated orange zest; beaten egg to glaze.

Mix together by hand the flour, yeast, sugar, cinnamon and orange (or use a food processor on a low speed with a dough hook). Dice the butter, put it into a small saucepan with half the tea and heat gently until the butter is melted. Add the rest of the tea, which should be cold, and pour the mixture into the dry ingredients. Mix and knead to smooth and elastic dough. Cover and leave to rise until doubled in size. A slow rise in a cool place is best.

Knead back the risen dough and work the grease (stoned and chopped small) into it. Divide the dough in two, shape each piece neatly and drop it into a small loaf tin. Cover and leave to prove for 1-1½ hours.

Glaze with beaten egg and bake on a hot baking sheet at 400°F (200°C) gas mark 6 for 30 min. Turn out on a rack right through. Cool on a rack before eating or wrapping and storing.

Even the maggots liked the cheese

On Page VII, Nicholas Woodworth names Corsica as one of his Top 10 travel tips for 1994. Here, he eats with a Corsican peasant

Corsica has a rich culinary tradition. And, like many other Mediterranean cooking, the island's fare remains close to its peasant roots. What counts is not richness or sophistication of style but fine, fresh ingredients prepared simply in bringing out the best of natural flavours.

At anyone, on the point, will reading? The trouble is, this kind of thing pops up so often in trendy cookbooks, Sunday supplements and other flimsy cookery programmes that it has become almost very much.

It is now a quarter of a century since Elizabeth David began telling us about the wonders of southern ingredients prepared freshly and with pretention. When she said to say it, of course, all that was about anything long enough to read was to hear it.

So, I was not going to bang the drum. This is not a discourse on freshness, simplicity and the gastronomic legacy of a rich Mediterranean peasant tradition. It is merely an account of a Corsican meal – one shared with a peasant – that brought home to me these truths in a fresh and simple manner.

I first heard of Pierre Milanini through his cousin, Jeanne, as we were in an elegant little restaurant in the Corsican town of Porto Vecchio. We were not discussing food, but the insular Corsican mentality. For an island people, Jeanne was telling the Corsicans surprisingly one of their element along their rich coast. Over the millennia the island has suffered repeated attack and invasion by and Corsicans have survived by seeking a little security and peace of the rugged interior – with time, the inhospitable mountains have become their preferred home.

I looked around the restaurant as he talked. The place was full, and of Corsicans. It was a full house of visitors from everywhere. The food was good, but it might have come from anywhere.

"If you want to see Corsica," Jeanne suggested, "why don't you go inland to Quenza? I have a cousin who runs a small and old d'etappe on the mountain behind the village. He's a bit of a hermit, slightly eccentric, and a Corsican. And he knows how to cook – every last thing he serves he grows, raises and prepares himself."

Who could resist a place like that? I left for the hills early the next morning. Jeanne would have been about Pierre Milanini's place in mind. I was d'etappe only in the village areas of France, and usually was a specialist clientele of cold and hungry ramblers, mountain climbers and so on. Their isolation, though, was not their quality; they are often the best strongholds of authentic regional cuisine.

The medieval village of Quenza is lost in a ring of high peaks and hills. I found the village hidden in a tiny, winding valley that disappeared into the chestnut forest above the village. The place was reached only by the well-groomed horses that pulled the ancient wooden carts.

At first, Pierre did not want to talk about his home. He had closed his eyes to the world, he said, shaking his long locks and thick grey beard. He was busy preparing his annual trip to Ajaccio – the days through the mountains on his back. Food, he told me,

Perfect peasant food: Pierre Milanini with all his own work should be no more hurried an affair than travel. But when he saw me, he said, he saw me as a guest. He was growing in the large garden behind the paddock, his pride and joy.

"They are the finest things around," he beamed. "I have seen the 'I have animals,' he said, glancing one by one at the door. I have 30 horses, 60 pigs, 30 cows, 100 chickens and 11 cats. I'd have more horses if I could afford them, but the damned things don't grow for themselves."

Pierre talked as he put a pot of soup on the fire and began slicing bread. An exemplar of Corsican insularity, he is a purist, a die-hard traditionalist, a hold-out against modern additives, any kind of prearmchair. In the end, he himself, a hunting dog lay snoring with its head in the air. Three more lay prone on the floor. Half a dozen were lounging on the long, scarred farm table that took up most of the room.

"Dehors!" Out! he roared, and the animals disappeared in a flurry of hair and tail. "I have animals," he said, glancing one by one at the door. I have 30 horses, 60 pigs, 30 cows, 100 chickens and 11 cats. I'd have more horses if I could afford them, but the damned things don't grow for themselves."

Pierre talked as he put a pot of soup on the fire and began slicing bread. An exemplar of Corsican insularity, he is a purist, a die-hard traditionalist, a hold-out against modern additives, any kind of pre-tion, all time-saving devices, any corner-cutting cooking method.

He has lived all his 60 years in Quenza. When he gives up producing food was a question of survival. He spent drought-ridden summers watering chestnut trees – without much success.

He was no hermit. He saw the family through the winter. When flour was an unaffordable luxury, "Life was difficult then," Pierre laughed. "We just didn't know it."

We sat down to plates of sliced tomatoes. Mine were accompanied by mild onion rings, parsley and olive oil, all home-produced, all delicious. Pierre's were accompanied by nothing but a little salt.

"We use many ingredients in our meals," he growled. "Add enough and you kill the taste. People like garnishes and dressings, but they don't like what is really there."

Perhaps he had a point, I thought, as I looked through a window at my host.

"And he says, 'don't massacre them!'" Pierre added. "Tomatoes are a little thing. Here, use this."

He passed over a clasp knife with a long, mean-looking blade. The kind you imagine gangsters pull into each other. I sighed. He one had instructed me on the use of dining implements since nursery.

A minute later, though, I was learning yet another lesson – to cut bread in the peasant fashion. Copying Pierre, I held his fresh-baked bread – round and the size of a small bicycle tyre – against my chest and drew my knife gingerly through the bread towards me. One slip, I thought, and I shall have myself fatally.

I was gaining confidence, however, by the time the soup bowls arrived. In them was a thick, fragrant vegetable soup, simmered for hours with herbs and chunks of smoked, salted pork, and was served with large slices of crusty bread and wine.

Again, though, Pierre brought out a little something. All these seasonings and herbs are fine – I like thyme, onion and garlic as much as anyone. But there is just one great secret. It is onion. Without the onion, you can do nothing, with it, you can do anything. It is the point of departure." Pierre was emphatic. I was not going to argue. It seemed as good a world view as any.

Silently, I drank in praise of the onion. But I did not remain silent. I cut off a thick slice from the leg of mutton. Pierre had it on the table. The flavour was superb.

"Nothing but salt and pepper in that," I slaughtered, cured and hung for five months. No flavouring, no herbs, no spices. The taste is in the flesh itself. Elsewhere, pigs are penned up. On this island, pigs wander round all day eating chestnuts and acorns. Corsica and look at what we make best in Corsica."

In a cool, dark, dry room off the main house, Pierre showed me the produce to which he gives his greatest attention. Hanging from racks on the ceiling were hams; on the walls, small jars of pig's necks; from their flanks, small jars of liver, heart and kidneys.

And so to cheese. Mysteriously, Pierre kept his ewe's cheese in a covered pot and, more mysteriously, insisted on spreading it on a slice of bread for me. It had a sharp, biting taste which I enjoyed – until I noticed my stomach wriggling to the surface but, once fallen to the table, they began springing about. I think I blushed.

Pierre had a great haw-haw of laughter. "Fromage vivant," he said. "We call it living cheese. You can't make it. It is just what it is. When I've heavy weather. But when I've a little wine, we like to eat on cheese. It's a good time."

I had had a little wine, but I had a little more. I began to have a good time again. There was coffee; home-made eau-de-vie; more talk about the manners and kitchen customs of Corsica; the time I left that rough and ramshackle little gîte and was heading back down the mountains to Porto Vecchio. I was in a quandary. I was wondering how I was ever going to have a good time in elegant little restaurants again.

ESSENTIAL GUIDE TO HEALTH & FITNESS

SHAPE UP AT THE MANOR

Our New Year fitness breaks are just the thing to overcome those Christmas indulgences. There's a health and beauty spa incorporating a gymnasium with treated wall on land, a variety of massages, therapies and beauty treatments as well.

HANBURY MANOR
Warr, Hertfordshire SG12 8SD Tel: 0920 187722 Fax: 0920 187022

HEALTH IS THE LUXURY OF OUR

ANTI STRESS THERAPY with BIO FEEDBACK, medical checkups and 40 different treatments. "VITAL THERAPY" in the "VITAL OASIS" of well-being. Elegant rooms with balcony. "ARTISANUM" with fitness center. Exclusive "Cuisine Vitale" to suit every taste.

6 nights incl. half board up to December 19, 1993 and from January 6, 94 up to February 6, 94 from DM 1,200 (two surcharges for single rooms).

VITAL HOTEL ROYAL
A-6100 Seefeld/Tyrol/Austria
Your vitality phone: 0541-43-5212-44310 or fax: 44-31-3550

For further details of why visiting in this section call Alison Prin on 071 407

Take a healthy break

TAKE ADVANTAGE OF OUR NEW MID-WEEK PROGRAMME. Resident bookings between Sunday and Thursday. TWO for the price of ONE! (one must be 18 years or over and pay full price)

CEDAR FALLS
For further details of why visiting in this section call Alison Prin on 071 407

For further details of why visiting in this section call Alison Prin on 071 407

For further details of why visiting in this section call Alison Prin on 071 407

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

TRAVEL

Real hot spots in future world

I WAS talking not long ago to a ski holiday specialist, a man who has scussed the world. Where, I asked, are the skiing hot spots in the future, those places which are little frequented today but whose renown is fast growing?

His answer: tomorrow's skiing hot spots are the cold ones - its glaciers. So sharply have world weather patterns changed in just a few years that low-altitude ski resorts can no longer be relied on for adequate snow-fall.

It is not just the weather that is different. The whole world is changing before our eyes, including travel destinations. What is to travel to one place rather than another? There is no single answer. But well in the fore is our hope that we are getting the "real thing". If we want a Mediterranean beach we want it unencumbered by high-rises, discotheques and traffic jams. What we really want when we go to a place has become spoiled so that it can come to contain too many people like tourists and too much clutter that resembles our own.

The trouble is that the attractive, interesting, unspoiled places we choose become spoiled as well. Such places are finite in number and becoming rarer. Yet the face of the world is changing. And, as expectations rise, a large number of options are opening up. Today people are choosing shorter-duration, independent, tailor-made holidays. They are more active in involvement with the place they are visiting. They are likelier to travel than to stay in a resort. They have more interest in culture than in sun and sea.

They are willing to pay for a more expensive, specialised holiday that suits their own hobbies and interests. In future, about European city breaks will be among the most popular types of travel. Cities such as Paris, Venice and Vienna remain eternally fashionable, but others are only now coming into vogue.

Travelers are realising, for example, that by visiting lesser-known Italian cities they can have all that Italy has to offer without any of the crowds or Florence's tourist hordes. Will Provence and the Dordogne remain in popularity? Probably not. What if we understand why visitors flock together in rural France, the French Mediterranean, these areas are over-crowded and over-priced. Underneath the just door, such areas as the Cévennes, Auvergne and Lozère offer delightful rural charms.

Perhaps the biggest surprise in newly-accessible destinations is eastern Europe. Here is an area of tremendous historical significance, a great patchwork of cultures that has been cut off to western visitors for half a century. Yet with few exceptions, eastern Europe has failed to catch on.

The main problem is that the east regards western tourism as a cash cow. Hungry for foreign exchange, but frustrated with sub-standard facilities and lacking expertise, eastern Europeans continue to charge more than their services are worth. Shoddy hotels, bars and restaurants charge inflated prices; the good hotels that do exist charge higher than western prices.

Istanbul: exotic, atmospheric, and conveniently reachable for short breaks

Many European destinations are simply not that attractive. Old, once-beautiful cities destroyed in the war have been rebuilt in a modern fashion, while many rural areas have suffered decades of environmental abuse. Sophia is dull. There is little left of old Bucharest. Warsaw is an artificial reconstruction. Budapest, for a year or two a rising star, is now falling back.

Even Prague, well preserved and today eastern Europe's most popular city, is in danger of pricing itself out of the market. St Petersburg, on the other hand, is a city which is likely to grow in appeal. So, strangely enough, is Moscow. There are still plenty of people more interested in exotic holidays than exploring strange new cities or unknown countryside. If the Mediterranean is slowing down on this type of development, where will they go? There are already signs that the Caribbean islands, once tropical hide-aways for the privileged, are heading down-market. In the next few years the Caribbean is likely to replace both Europe and the Spanish Islands as the place for package holidays.

When, then, will we be able to enjoy warm-weather holidays away from crowds and over-commercialisation? Asia and Africa have long been the exotic travel circuit, but now both offer new and intriguing possibilities.

Forget Bali. It is beginning to resemble Torremolinos. Ditto Phuket. Many of the better-known resorts in Thailand, on the other hand, are scores of miles in south-east Asia where you can feel like Robinson Crusoe if you wish to.

Excellent facilities without crowds can be found in Lombok, a 10-minute flight from Bali; at Lang-kawi, just over the Thai border in Malaysia; and in the Visaya Islands in the central Philippines.

The really fascinating part of Asia is opening up, however, is Indonesia - Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. While the rest of Asia is charging at full speed into a high-tech future, these places have been too busy with war and social readjustment to have gone beyond simple agriculture.

Similarly, Africa offers new places to travel. In north Africa, the violence has put many travellers off Egypt, but at the other end of the continent there is hope for an end to violence.

If the new South Africa is successful, it has so much to offer in the way of beaches, landscapes, game-viewing and sports that it may well replace places like Jamaica and Florida.

The place most strongly favoured for the future, however, is Latin America. This has always been popular for its wild rivers and offshore Galapagos Islands. Fast-growing in popularity now are Guatemala, the highland market towns and lowland Maya ruins, and Chile, for the variety of its desert, lakes and mountain environments.

For some reason, the most popular Latin American destination in the world will be the hold-out of communism: Cuba. No one can quite explain to me why the island should appear quite as glamorous as present. Perhaps the world is changing so fast that we now feel a sentimental attachment to what appears a long-gone past.

One of the best publications describing the range of individually-tailored travel available from UK travel firms is the one produced by the Association of Independent Tour Operators: 133a St Margaret's Road, Twickenham, Middlesex TW1 1JL. Tel: 081-744-9280.

Nicholas Woodworth

Ten destinations worth considering

Travel is so subjective that no two people could ever devise the same list of Top 10 destinations. Here is my own list of places - urban, seaside, European or tropical - that look promising for 1994, writes Nicholas Woodworth.

- 1 Istanbul: about the most exotic and atmospheric place you can reach from London on a short city break conveniently.
- 2 Corsica: has an off-putting reputation for terrorism, which has left the island one of the friendliest, most beautiful and best preserved areas in the Mediterranean.
- 3 Lake Lucerne, Switzerland: astonishing mountain beauty and bourgeois self-assurance.
- 4 Luangwa Valley, eastern Zambia: fast being poached out, but so few controls that it is one of the last places where game-viewing is still a real adventure.
- 5 The Keys, Belize, central American Caribbean islands the way they used to be - rum, sailing boats, conch-shell steaks.
- 6 Lombok Island, Indonesia: next door to Bali, but 20 years behind in seaside development. The further one heads inland, the further the present age recedes; strictly Stone Age at its centre.
- 7 Terlingua, Texas: ghost town in the Chihuahuan desert near the Rio Grande. Recommended for its bars, cowboy music, frontier spirit and authentic atmosphere.
- 8 Hue, central-Vietnam: old imperial capital on the Perfume River, home to the most genuine and welcoming smiles in Asia.
- 9 Salvador de Bahia, north-eastern Brazil: Afro-Latin culture, physical sensuality, and coconut-milk-based cooking.
- 10 See Lake Victoria, Uganda: the ultimate escape; difficult to reach, difficult to get away from, negligible facilities. Serene and entirely unimpressed.

HOLIDAYS & TRAVEL

VILLAS

THE VERY BEST VILLA HOLIDAYS

CV-Travel has specialised for over 10 years in original holidays to distinctive villas and small intimate hotels all year round. Our 1994 programmes:

CORFU VILLAS (Bosnia, Corfu and Paris)

MEDITERRANEAN WORLD WIDE

Italy: Tuscany, Umbria, Palazzo Belmonte in Campania - Sorrento

Spain: Andalusia, Majorca - Mallorca

Portugal: Algarve, Monchique Hills - Madeira

France: Corsica (South of France), Cors (Aster - mountain brochure)

CV 071-537 0881
(071-537 0882)
TRAVEL 24 hr brochure service

PALMER PARKER

The Blue Book is a definitive guide to extremely comfortable villas

Côte d'Azur • Algarve • Mallorca • Barbados • Jamaica • St. Lucia

0494 612022 (24 hrs) 0494 614184

FRANCE

Chez Nous

OVER 1000 PRIVATE OWNERS ADVISORY

Chateaux • Villages • Family Homes • Apartments • Farm Houses • Mobile Homes • Boat Houses • All parts of France

0484 632506

CHINA

China

Widest choice of guided and independent tours out of UK and Hong Kong.

For the most comprehensive China brochure, ring CTS, No. 1 China Specialists!

071-836 9911

China Travel Services (UK) Ltd
54 Gower Street, London WC2E 6RF
Fax 071-836 9121

BAVARIA

BAVARIA

on Lake Tegernsee 45 minutes from Munich. Fully furnished apartment (sleeps 2-4) to rent in idyllic resort town at foot of Bavarian Alps.

Tel/Fax: +49 8022 65853

ITALY

UMBRIA

18th century farmhouse restored to luxury standard. Spectacular hilltop position. Large private pool. Sleeps 10 or 8 + 2 in sep. appts.

Tel: 0386
Fax 0386 871506

SKIING

NORWAY

up to 60% Child Discount

100 Skiing Resorts

UNBELIEVABLE SNOW RECORD

CHARTER FOR ALL AGES

0533 515111

FREE SKIS OFFER

CALL US NOW FOR A BROCHURE OPEN 7 DAYS

Reserve Holidays & Travel Ltd

SKI WEEKEND

The specialists in organising flexible short breaks for individual group or corporate.

Tel: 0367 252213
ATOL 2775

UK HOLIDAYS

The Finest Country Houses available for holiday rental throughout Britain.

Many areas: Devon, Dorset, Shropshire, etc.

For further details contact Tel: 0223 232886 Fax: 0223 232888

AUSTRALIA

AUSTRALIA GREAT BARRIER REEF

The Great Barrier Reef is the eighth wonder of the world. Its islands are a seventh heaven. Unspoiled anywhere, these luxurious hideaways offer the discerning traveller peace, sporting activities, golden beaches, tropical vegetation, superb cuisine and above all, peace.

Exclusive 3 night packages to HAYMAN ISLAND, LIZARD ISLAND and FRANKLIN ISLAND are available from $297 per person. Incl. Flights from Sydney, accommodation, breakfast and transfers.

For more details on these and other destinations in Australia, New Zealand and the South Pacific, call the Specialists for a colour brochure.

Travel Portfolio Ltd 0384 762255

73 Churchgate Street, 7th Floor, Sydney NSW 2009

HOTELS

25% OFF CORPORATE RATES 25% OFF

At This Superb Town House Hotel:

- Overlooking Hyde Park
- 55 Personalised Rooms
- 24 Hour Room Service
- Private Car Park
- Swimming Pool & Bar
- Superb Central Location

LONDON ELIZABETH HOTEL
Lancaster Terrace, Hyde Park, London W2 3PF
Tel: 071-402 6641 Fax: 071-402 8900

"Your pleasure is our business"

EARLYBIRD BUDGET LONDON BREAKS.

1 night from the price of 2 nights free.

Tel: 071 402 8900
Fax: 071 792 1857

AFRICA

ZIMBABWE

TANZANIA, BOTSWANA & SOUTH AFRICA

TAILORMADE SAFARIS

Luxurious remote lodges. Waiting safaris. Expert guides. Lovely colonial hotels. Superb wildlife.

Call us to create your ideal safari

Phone John Burdett on (0804) 28979

AFRICA EXCLUSIVE

Hamilton House
Northampton, NN1 5EX

IRELAND

The Irish Selection

The Irish Selection offers a choice of delightful hotels, castles and their comfort and hospitality. Write or phone for brochure.

The Irish Selection
Chester Close, London SW1A 7HQ 071-245 0055

SPECIAL INTEREST

ANTIGUA

Enjoy a lovely holiday on a glorious beach at the 1st Class

Haleycon Cove Hotel at $599

End week room FREE (pay half board full stay)

Child sharing $100

Depart Jan-17 Mar

SPECIAL OFFER JAN '94
US$150 per room

See your travel agent or CALL 081-748 5050

HAYES and JARVIS
081-748 5050

Taste the Best of KENYA

Safaris in Exotic Beaches; Wildlife Safari; Flying British Airways

First-class, Antigua, The Americas, Caribbean, Lake Nakuru & The Masai Mara

£1431

(12Nights Safari Full Board)

7Nights Beach Add-On $197

SOMAK

Tel: 081 423 3000

437A W 4th St, ATOL 281

CHINA

TERRACOTA WARRIORS

Escorted Tour visiting Beijing, Xian, Shanghai, Wuxi, Suzhou, Hangzhou, Guilin & Hong Kong.

14 nights

£1699

Dep Mar-31 May

See your travel agent or CALL 011 5050

HAYES and JARVIS
011 5050

AZORES

1, 3 or 5 Island holidays. Destination Portugal. Details: 0993-773269 ABTA 64267

FLIGHTS

America's Biggest Offer!!!

Specialists in First-Class Vacations First & Business Class Fares

USA-CANADA-MEXICO-HAWAII-CARIBBEAN

USL	USL	USL	USL	USL	USL	USL	USL	USL	USL
ACAPULCO	ANTIGUA	ATLANTA	BALTIMORE	BANAROS	BOSTON	CHICAGO	DALLAS	DENVER	FORT MYERS
$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100
LOS ANGELES	MONTREAL	MONTREAL	MONTREAL	MONTREAL	MONTREAL	MONTREAL	MONTREAL	MONTREAL	MONTREAL
$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100
SALT LAKE CITY	SALT LAKE CITY	SALT LAKE CITY	SALT LAKE CITY	SALT LAKE CITY	SALT LAKE CITY	SALT LAKE CITY	SALT LAKE CITY	SALT LAKE CITY	SALT LAKE CITY
$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100	$1100

YOU CHOOSE

REGIONAL SURCHARGE/BADEPOT TAX APPLIES TO ALL FLIGHTS

AIR PASSENGER INSURANCE (APRIL 1994) $100

EXCELLENT DISCOUNT RATES ON HOTEL, CRUISE, CAR, RENTALS

FIRST/BUSINESS: 071 637 8485

Face 071 458 4848

071 458 4848

FLIGHT BOOKERS PLC

Business Class

NEW YORK	LOS ANGELES	HONG KONG	TOKYO	PARIS	BRUSSELS
£1259	£1099	£1259	£1599	£225	£225

FOR YOUR NEXT TRIP BUSINESS OR PLEASURE CALL:

071 757-3000

OPEN TODAY

DISCOUNT FARES

In 1st Class, Club, Economy Class. Also Concorde. For the best guaranteed deals please call the experts

Tel: 071-636 1111 Fax: 071-637 3454

Pan Express Travel

CORNWALL

Cornish Traditional Cottages

Self-catering

on the coast and in the Scilly Isles

Send for your FREE brochure today or phone 072559

LOSTWITHIEL, CORNWALL PL23 8HT

FIJI

South Pacific

Turtle Island, Fiji

Spend a week of luxury on a private island in the heart of the South Pacific

7 nights from £2998 incl. flights, meals, drinks etc.

For more details on this and other destinations in Fiji, call the experts:

Travel Portfolio Ltd (0284) 762255

CARIBBEAN

Caribbean - St. Lucia

Superb Villa, panoramic position; 3 doubles, staff, pool, with 42' Motor Yacht. Special Rate Winter 1993/94 US$2950 per week including costal trip.

Tel: 0800 840678

VOLVO

NO PRIZES FOR GUESSING THE BEST SELLING ESTATE.

Choosing the Volvo Wentworth over its closest rivals isn't one of life's more difficult decisions.

It's an obvious one.

They all offer a 2 litre engine; yet the turbo-charged Volvo is more powerful and quicker (0-60 in 9.6 seconds).

They're all designed to carry large loads; but the Volvo carries loads more. 25% more than the Granada.

They're all designed with comfort in mind, electric windows, central locking, electric mirrors, radio cassettes; yet the Volvo Wentworth is the only car which has air conditioning as standard.

They offer the safety features you'd expect as standard; crumple zones, safety cages, ABS.

The Volvo sets new standards. SIPS (our unique Side Impact Protection System), five 3-point seat belts, driver's airbag (as does the Granada), and an integrated child seat.

So do Ford and Vauxhall do anything that Volvo don't? Yes. They charge more. The Granada Ghia costs £20,070, the Carlton CD costs £19,810, the Volvo Wentworth costs only £19,245. Now, which car would you rather buy?

For more information write to: Volvo Wentworth, Dept GWC, Freeport SN 1211, Swindon SN2 6BR.

Name

Address

Postcode Tel:

THE VOLVO WENTWORTH. A CAR YOU CAN BELIEVE IN.

VOLVO 940 WENTWORTH ESTATE £19,245 INCLUDING VAT. METALLIC PAINT SHOWN AVAILABLE AS COST OPTION. PRICE EXCLUDES STANDARD VAT, DELIVERY, CHARTER, EXCISE INCLUDING VAT. ALL PRICES ARE CORRECT AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS. FOR FURTHER INFORMATION TELEPHONE 0630 400 430.

ARTS

After all the furores over the Arts Council, the London orchestras and the Turner Prize, the FT critics look to the future

After the age of the dinosaur

A high-contrast, black and white photograph of two figures in traditional Japanese theatrical costumes. The figure on the left wears a white mask with large, dark, stylized eyes and a wide, open mouth, holding a small object. The figure on the right wears a dark, patterned headpiece and a dark garment, looking towards the left.

Chen Kaige's 'Farewell my Concubine': China and Taiwan are filling the gap between the disappearing European 'art cinema' and Hollywood pop

THE technological prehistoric drama where the dinosaurs are laid to rest for civilisation. (Worse news is that The Flintstones itself came to your favourite TV channel last year.) But perhaps this pattern of historical back-peddalling, of a film industry yearning alike for pre-civilisation and for primal story properties, fits naturally into a millennial time-scale: poor old us! And we desire to give the home-base one hug - having been hurled into the year zero may explain - if it doesn't - Hollywood's fascination with the sequel. We keep being told it will stop; it never does. Coming next: Look Who's Talking Now, Men In The OK Corral, City Slicker 2, The Evening Star 3...

Sequels we cannot take: they have become a fact of life. And other films like The Untouchables, Runaway Train and Western are also disturbing.

One is like "Have you watched any good books lately?" syndrome. Increasingly the men who once American cinema's great adventures - Martin Scorsese, John Ford, Sergio Leone, Francis Coppola - have been abandoning their old rough-and-tumble hyper-realism for a season ticket to the public library. Last year we found Mr Coppola at the British Council "S" for Stoker. From there his Marathon came through "W" Wharton, Edith (The Age Of Innocence, opening last on January 25th). There has to be more cinema caught between the forms of emulation - low aping its own action tropes and piping to the tune of famous films. But I fear Hollywood, having put Europe to the test with its own world-colonising populism, is now content to rest on its spoils of victory. It knows that the great days of the European writer-director are over and that he must either invent and shoot his own original stories, racing about the world and taking studio committees, story conferences and bloated production costs, is a choice being overlooked up by history.

When we make for Italy is not a new year resolution that a new year revolution. Something I put the pep back into all those ailing movie lands between Tinseltown and Tokyo. And something I get Hollywood out of its second stone age and into the third millennium A.D.

Musical farce may sharpen the batons

Amy look on the fate of the Arts Council of Great Britain in the recent The Great British Theatre Farce was an omen in the middle of last month, and mockery and abuse then flowed down on the whole organisation - accompanied by more than one public call for it to be wound up altogether, and replaced by a line of direct government funding of the arts.

This hilarious yet heart-breaking saga of administrative tomfoolery that led to the outcry may be briefly summarised as follows: an independent team set up by the musical panel of the Arts Council to decide, by means of a "beauty contest" which would choose London musical works for a symphony orchestra, and in consequence, and in that order, would have had to grant a huge outlay by way of porters of all these orchestras, and by the beauty contest, a sensible judgment by the independent team then completely ignored by the Council, a final decision on musical funding for 1984-85 amounting to a comprehensive fudge of the whole issue.

programme of early-evening contemporary-music ~~already~~ already in its second year of existence, seems to have ~~when up the west~~ when up the west, The London Philharmonic, though the recent welcoming-on-board of Harrison Birtwistle and Roger Norrington had the look of a desperate face-saving exercise, now looks set to follow suit. (Neither of these orchestras will really gain full credibility, however, until the question-marks hanging over Mark Stroom-infallible Chief Conductors are resolved - in the case of the Philharmonia's Giuseppe Sinopoli, the naming of a successor, and in that of the EPO's Franz Welser-Möst, greater evidence of artistic maturity than he has so far shown.)

The Royal Philharmonic, least-encouraged of the trio, has come out of the experience with dignity and new sponsorship from Classic FM; its seeking-out of a "National Orchestra" locally, and its exciting new links forged with the Kirov Opera (as witnessed in the splendid concert performance of Tchaikovsky's opera ~~within~~ within early last month), are two clear signs of new vigour

The questions which arise out of the settling dust and all the merriment at the Council's expense are the following: Is a body that in the last few years has shown both an inability to support all its clients effectively, and a propensity to turn against some of its clients when they looked like the nearest whim to exist such a body ~~likely~~ to exist any longer?

There is no predicting with confidence either its survival or disintegration. But, its current and future are satisfyingly unexpected fashion, — side effect of the "beauty contest" — to have been a greatly increased — artistic urgency among the London orchestras recently under scrutiny — a sense of sharpened standards and "honesty-quotient" in both programmes and roster of conductors and —

The Philharmonia, with an exceptionally interesting programme —

But I shall not be at all surprised, if the same while at the time, during 1960, the result of the London orchestral bazaar — baha — a pleasingly lively one: a newly vital, uncompromising London orchestral scene.

Find the dancers a home

Hopefully, this spring anticipates that there will be a little good news for the British arts scene this year. Our two leading modern dance troupes - London Contemporary and Rambert - are in a state of flux in its infinite wisdom the Arts Council has arranged that the former will be down in size, while the latter will give up its big budget in the present capabilities. Our smaller modern dance companies will be reduced to dull creations and lowered vitality, but are promoted above their station. (What Jonathan Burrows will be a matter of real fascination: he has an original creative talent, unlike most of the modern dance offerings in the commonplace to dance-going.)

The Royal Ballet is on reduced performances at Covent Garden, and repeating too many of the repertoire mistakes. Evenings are being marketed under flimsy titles — The Four Seasons, Hours, so likely — rather than on merit. The natural result is the opera, which is the great opera of the productions, is not shown on artistically credible or logical terms. If New York City Ballet mount a Balanchine Festival, why should not Opera give us an Ashton Festival, a MacMillan celebration, and a public television series?

the central figures in ballet of our time?

The Royal Opera House must have been refurbishing in 1997, with a £10-million re-opening in 2000. When the resident ballet and opera companies will find a home by no means clear. Drury Lane has persistently bruited, and it is to be available this time would also answer a further long-standing problem: our need for a dance house.

If I have one hope for the coming year, it is that the moves be made towards securing a home for the National international dance in London. We have but to study the example of the Paris Opera. With its opening of the spiffing new Opera Bastille, Garnier's old palace has become a great European centre for dance. The Opera Ballet is resident there, and the theatre also offers hospitality to many visitors. (The Royal Ballet should have played there last summer.) The present season's immediate example is that, by July, the Palais Garnier will have presented ten varied programmes by its house company, and will also Five guest ensembles, ranging from Tyrfa Tharp to San Francisco Ballet. A comparable theatre in London might rescue our ballet and dance troupes their olddrums. it would provide a much-needed location for large visiting ensembles, who otherwise have fight for free weeks at Coliseum or Covent Garden.

I do not believe in the Hall as a serious house, whatever the advantages in size a troupe the Bolshoi. I do believe in idea of a house which would

Now the Royal Ballet to play in addition to its Opera House schedules, which would provide a home for English National Ballet, could adapt in size to take in smaller companies, and, most significantly, would help broaden the experience of our dancers and dance public.

Once again a first (the 1980s) London was a major dance centre, and we saw an exceptional variety of performance. We are starving, our are shrinking much because the predictability of the on offer as of prices. We do worse than provide in which our own companies. our visitors, might show not just what we have in recent years, but marvels dance can achieve in a setting.

Leaving behind bowler hats and striped satin waistcoats, jazz people. For the unconverted, the improvisation is akin to dinnitis. But to the modernist at least, jazz is sound in action.

Jazz is young - it is only 75 years old. The word was first uttered. And if its artistic development has been explosive, then, it is only just emerging from the underground to take its place in the conservatory, the hall and the airwaves.

With all cutting-edge art, jazz is its practitioners need

Jazz/Ga

Sink or subsidies to develop and flourish. Listeners, too, are taking music taken live, which means more touring and better venues.

Jazz in the UK has not fared well thus far, however, and has played a minor role in all the other performance arts. In March, though, the Arts Council will award the status of its first ever National Theatre of Jazz. This development will mean be used to allocate funds for the following financial year [1991/92] although, given the gloomy climate for funding as a whole, and the council's second year funding jazz in particular, the board-and-beret and are not optimistic.

Booth subsidy

Arts Council research (for 1991/92) shows that the same number of people attended jazz (£2.74m). These in turn got £700 subsidy a head.

as much as in new (classical) music and even in literature (Toni Morrison's Jazz), and it continues to explore new territory. This development, precisely because its success is not assured, so often takes place without commercial encouragement. But it is the place of subsidy, surely. (Or perhaps the creeping comfort of the "heritage" argument would be more accurate about preserving, say, trad jazz.)

It is not even that modern jazz is entirely unchallenging: audiences are submitting themselves to it in increasing numbers. The same Arts Council patron has shown atten-

Exhibitions/ Open a

The best news for ~~the~~ is that the new Italian Minister of Culture, Alberto Ronchey, ~~has~~ decreed that all monuments, museums and galleries should be ~~open from 10am to 7pm~~ open from 10am to 7pm. No more apologies pinned to firmly ~~closed~~ doors. No more closures at ~~the~~ Hur-

Exhibitions some of the ones

Susan Moore

11 hours

plete catalogue of the Italian drawings in the Chatsworth Collection prompted the display of a massive selection of the British Museum (until January 9). Coincidentally, some of the sketches that got away – sold at auction in 1984 and 1987 – took a fall simultaneously in Drawings from the J. Paul Getty Museum at the B.A. (until January 23).

 <h1 style="margin: 0;">SOUTH BANK</h1> Tel: 0204 974 928 8900 10am-5pm daily Free Entry
<h2 style="margin: 0;">ROYAL FESTIVAL HALL</h2>
Until 22 Jan 7.30	THE NUTCRACKER English National Ballet. Matinée £12.30 pm on Jan 1, 3, 8, 12, 15, 19, 22. Some special offers for children.
23 Jan 7.30	SPRING Shakespeare's Union, £22, £28, £28, £21, £16, £7 'ENB'SBC
24 Jan 7.30	JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH Johann Strauss Orchest. 8, Brabury. JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH Strauss Danzlers in period costumes. 2.30pm: £119.50, £17.50, £14.50, £10.50, £7.50. 7.30pm: £21, £14, £10, £7, £4.
25 Jan 7.30	JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH Queen Elizabeth Hall
26 Jan 7.30	MOZART'S GOSI FAN TUTTLE , Musical Theatre London presents a fully staged production of the musical GOSSIP by the company. A treat for both opera lovers and theatre goers.
27 Jan 7.30	MOZART'S GOSI FAN TUTTLE 'MTL'
28 Jan 7.30	HANDEL, MESSIAH (Complete) Lam edition London Orpheus Orchestra & Choir, James Gaddam. Organ: John Cunliffe. Barry Savidge, Lds 'LOC'
29 Jan 7.30	UTS LEMPER Jeff Cohen (piano). The International Academy of Music presents a programme of UTS Well songs new to the South Bank.
30 Jan 7.30	EDMUNDO ROS & STANLEY SLACK Barry Cline Edmundo Ros with the SBC Big Band and Stanley Slack with his quintet and strings play a million-styles rock two

ROYAL FESTIVAL HALL FRIDAY 12 JANUARY 1989 7.30 pm
IN AID OF THE MALCOLM SARGENT CANCER FUND FOR CHILDREN

MESSIAH
HANDEL

THE MALCOLM SARGENT FESTIVAL CHOIR
ANNE DAWSON • FRANCIS MCCAFFERTY
HIDOSHISA TSUBUI • ANTHONY
JOHN BIRCH

THE LONDON GALA ORCHESTRA
CHARLES PARKES CONDUCTOR

Tickets £16.50, £14.50, £12.50, £9.50, £6.50

Royal Festival Hall Box Office 01-7620 1111 and First Call 01-740 7200

Registered in England play his one or two bars against another - classical music built up: £1.50, ballet £5.74, and contemporary dance-gazers

£1.00 - the numbers do say something about the artistic order, and how the numbers are the place of jazz in it.
Jazz has coloured a great deal of what is considered new and exciting in music (in pop live today to 1961 - the British Jazz scene.

This is why the jazz constituency - musicians, promoters and audiences - had a turning point has been reached. Not only would increased funding keep the fires of improvisation burning in 1961, it would also reward the growing curiosity of new listeners.

ROYAL OPERA HOUSE, COVENT GARDEN

Sunday 9th January at 7 pm

ENGLISH BACH FESTIVAL

A new production and in Classical Greece

ORFEO

Claudio Monteverdi

Orfeo RUSSELL SMYTHE

Esordisce MARILENE ELLI SMITH

Massigliera DELLA JONES

English Bach Festival Orchestra

Conductor HOWARD WILLIAMS

Director TOM HAWKES

Designer PETER MICE

Choreographer SARAH CREMER

Under the patronage of His Excellency, The Greek Ambassador

Sponsored by A.G. Lescarot Foundation

Times 2.10 - 2.10.61

Box Office 077 290 1000

public and private — are not otherwise easily accessible. The most spectacular was — Martin-Gropius-Bau. Painted Manuscripts from France and Italy at the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris (until January 16). Only rarely can such light-sensitive material be displayed. Over 230 manuscripts demonstrate the genius of French Renaissance painting. The richness of the manuscripts' faded colours is extraordinary.

Most controversial was the highly lucrative whirlwind world tour of the Impressionists from the Musée D'Orsay until January 18. The trustees' flagrant breach of Dr Barnes' indiscreetly forbidding the loan or exhibition of his art treasures quashed an attempt to re-acquisition up (15 paintings) is enough to make any would-be philanthropist think twice about financing the public good. There were also exposed that many of the places, Soreau's semi-legendary "Pousins" which were in no condition to travel.

In London, the animated approach to the market and the less demanding shows, it was far more heartening to see multidisciplinary blockbuster still with us feeding the mind as well as the eye, de Martin-Gropius-Bau in Europe brought together books and manuscripts, scientific instruments and treatises, maps, prints and lacquer and porcelain, painting and sculpture in documentation, unexpected, rich.

Versailles and the Royal Academy of Europe in the palace at Versailles repatriated the finest surviving French gold and silver plate and porcelain — housed as far afield as St Petersburg — and plus paintings, tapestries, and furniture like, in present day Britain, the recent success of art, music and book blockbusters (until February 27).

Thanks to the restoration project of its greatest LVMC, Versailles is now able to stage regular exhibitions, bringing back the empty space of Louis XIV's

[illegible]

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

ARTS

Auctioneers all bubbly about 1994

And the trickle down effect will help, says Antony Thorncroft

Antique dealers, from Bermondsey Market to New Bond Street, and fine art auctioneers, from Bonham's, Lots Road to Christie's, St James's, had plenty of excuses to raise a glass last night. They could choose to celebrate a much improved 1993 and bright prospects for 1994, or drown their sorrows at another poor trading year, made worse by the imminent arrival of VAT on imported antiques from non-EC countries which threatens to destroy the UK's antique market.

The auction houses drank the champagne, the dealers the anti-spumante. The 1993 results for the auction houses were distinctly encouraging. Sotheby's, globally, raised its sales by 17 per cent to $1.32bn. (In sterling terms it was a 31 per cent jump to $875m.) It also managed to stretch its lead over rival Christie's, which recorded a 3 per cent dollar gain, to $1.15, or a sterling rise of 14 per cent to $726m. For both salerooms the recovery picked up steam in the autumn season.

Facts matter in the art world. The problems of the last four years have concentrated around the shortage of fine antiques to sell. Despite the apparent inavailability of the three "D's" which held the market - death, divorce and debts - somehow sellers (even Lloyds Names) have managed to hold out, awaiting higher prices. The year-end window could spread the word that owners can once again profitably cash in their antiques.

Sotheby's, which at one time seemed to have goods worth under $10m, has realised the need to capture collectors when they last market came in the hope that their buying appetite will grow with the wealth. Expect many more "Colonnade" sales, where work from home and through fairs, dealers will take heart from the improvement in the low price range. If the house market improves, if the City exchange continues to provide windfall profits, if the City spawns more bonus millionaires - some of the surplus wealth is bound to find its way into antiques.

An 18th century view of Dresden in ruins by Bernardo Bellotto; part of the Peter Jay Sharp sale at Sotheby's.

The next few weeks will show whether dealers can hope to join in the better prospects of the salerooms. In January 19 at the Business Design Centre in Islington there is art the place for contemporary art. Major dealers like Crane

Kalman, Anthony D'Offay and Karsten Schubert are showing for the first time, and works by Bridget Riley, Bruce McLean, Richard Hamilton, Chagall, Ken Rife, Peter Howson, and many more will be on offer.

Then in January comes the World of Drawings and Watercolours at the Park Lane Hotel, with a wide range of watercolours, from Constable to Sara Armstrong Jones. First time buyers tend to be attracted to either contemporary artists or to traditional watercolours. These prices will be no higher than those asked, and always achieved, last year.

At the Royal Academy in London, the trickle down effect: the proof of the pudding is in the eating. The prices paid for the New York lot in time more than in Portobello Road. After years of wishful thinking, dealers should be better for the year. There may also be fresh ideas in the auction houses. There is a new house at Sotheby's and some important management changes at Christie's.

Collecting rises and falls in line with the state of the economy and the omens for the year. Underpinning the revival there is the arrival of the Lottery. This will provide the cash to keep the good objects in the UK. It will help museums and galleries to buy again. It will give confidence to the future of the national heritage. It will make the profile of art and culture. Those dealers that have managed to survive could prosper again - as long as the VAT genie is kept firmly bottled up.

At the Royal Academy in London, the trickle down effect: the proof of the pudding is in the eating. The prices paid for the New York lot in time more than in Portobello Road. After years of wishful thinking, dealers should be better for the year. There may also be fresh ideas in the auction houses. There is a new house at Sotheby's and some important management changes at Christie's.

Collecting rises and falls in line with the state of the economy and the omens for the year. Underpinning the revival there is the arrival of the Lottery. This will provide the cash to keep the good objects in the UK. It will help museums and galleries to buy again. It will give confidence to the future of the national heritage. It will make the profile of art and culture. Those dealers that have managed to survive could prosper again - as long as the VAT genie is kept firmly bottled up.

Elevation of everyday objects

Lynn MacRitchie explains what 'modern art' means in 1994

"I do not like art today. I think it has gone to hell, as a result of the financial attitude," wrote Peggy Guggenheim in her autobiography in 1964. A trenchant judgment may give us pause, especially as it ended with the art "market" as defined by the international figures from Sotheby's and Christie's, "significantly improved" on the previous year.

Ms Guggenheim's position was not entirely innocent, however. She had been used to getting work from the artists she discovered for comparatively small sums, and was especially annoyed when she could no longer afford to pay the prices which the American art market achieved for the work of her former protégés. While it is easy to feel sympathy with her horror at discovering buyers of art who were merely for investment, the conclusions she is drawn to are more dubious.

She went on to write that the 20th century, having produced Cubism and Abstract Expressionism, could be expected to produce no more great art. "A field must be fallow now and again," she concluded, adding "Artists try too hard to be original. That is why we have all this painting that isn't painting any more."

Oh but Peggy, that is just where you were wrong. Painting is painting now, some of it good, some of it bad, just like it always was. The only difference is that painting now has taken its place along with a host of other visual arts. Artists have been painting over the last 40 or so years of expressing what it is that they want to say. Some would argue that this agenda for this, and for the art of the end of the 20th century, was set by Ms Guggenheim's first husband, Marcel Duchamp, who abandoned painting in favour of experiments with the mechanics of visualisation, the elevation of everyday objects into the realm of art simply by the artist's declaring them so to be.

"I don't know what I would have done without him," she had written. "I could not distinguish one modern work from another." Ms Guggenheim admitted to Duchamp with her customary candour, "the man was a genius, acknowledging that art is not just something which can be known or felt or thought of."

It is something about which it is possible, indeed worth, to learn. This truth has been lost sight of these last years when the politics of the marketplace and the pressure for success have distorted our view of what it is, exactly, that artists do. The fact that some people are enormous amounts of money is not relevant to the work which is done. For whatever artists may create, it is not the art market.

What I think they do, and what Peggy Guggenheim thought they did, is make us think about the world we have made. "Art is its age," she wrote of Cubism, "therefore it had to change completely in the world of the 20th century." Artists offer us an image of our world, which we may accept or reject as we choose. Our only duty is to try to understand.

If artists are presenting us with a world of houses or piles of bricks or paint dripped from the end of a brush over tarps on the floor we must ask ourselves, but why? Why paint? Why now? For artists do not create in a vacuum; their work has a source and that source, fundamentally, is life, their experience of the world we all live in. If we do not like what they make us see, it is only because, as our trust mirrors, they are showing us something of ourselves.

Is it possible, for instance, to look at the work of Francis Bacon, a magnificent addition to the last summer, and not be in horror? But his images of human suffering and degradation are valued, highly valued, in both monetary and artistic terms. We look at them and know that something of us is in there too, something dark and terrible. It just takes a little getting used to.

I for one am delighted when the moment of breakthrough comes, and the struggle in the studio begins to see the light of day, whatever form it takes. I, unlike Ms Guggenheim and so many since, am willing to look at anything. And I know, as I look at an installation in a modern factory or a performance in a warehouse that, if the quality is there, the market will, eventually, follow. The artist leads, the money comes behind.

Blockbusters – and Buckingham Palace

Patricia Morison on what people really wanted to go and see during the year

What did people want to see in 1993? It was the year when the masses stormed into the Long Gallery of Buckingham Palace. In two months, 277,000 visitors trod over the red carpet, and the red carpeted some people want to see the art and a lot of people bought it. This happy experiment, long overdue, will be repeated next summer. It should become a permanent feature of a London August.

This was the year when cultural one-upmanship meant saying smugly "Actually, I saw it in New York..." or, "I saw it in Washington..." Modigliani and the Barnes Collection were the titans among the international blockbusters, giving pleasure to millions and handsomely repaying their investment.

Modigliani at the Pompidou Centre in Paris attracted 743,000 visitors. It was set far off double the number (410,000) who went to the Grand Palais for the first time, and the last, exhibition of paintings from the Renaissance to the 20th century. The Pompidou also had a lot of fortune. Its ducking and weaving it was possible at least to elap eyes on most paintings. Even so, I wonder how many people share my feeling that it would be more desirable to see one experienced eye than actually see the work.

Comfortably outstripping Modigliani already is the exhibition which, if the late Dr Edward C. Barnes had had his way, would never have been thrust upon the world. Impressionist and Post-Impressionist masterpieces from the Barnes Collection at the Musée d'Orsay in Paris until January 2. The number of visitors is estimated to be one million.

Yet I confess to feeling only slightly wistful to be one of the million who has "seen the Barnes". My far keener regrets are for missing Jacopo Bassano (Kimbell, Fort Worth/Bassano del Grappa), Judith Leyster (Haarlem/Worcester Art Museum), and above all Ribera's suffering saints and philosophers (Metropolitan, New York). Those are chances which will not recur whereas, being rational for a minute, I feel has been taken with a loan selected from a permanent exhibition.

In Paris, moreover, the Barnes exhibition was adulterated with pictures from the Orsay's collection. So the real experience still awaits us, the Barnes Foundation in Philadelphia. This is by all accounts one of the most idiosyncratic and absorbing collections of paintings of the 19th century - always assuming that its trustees yet again thwart the wishes of Dr Barnes by re-hanging the collection.

At the Royal Academy in London, the most successful exhibitions were Picasso (195,700 visitors), the Great Age of British Watercolours (208,887), and American Art. This last, despite being soured with critics' bile, drew close to 200,000. One exceptional show which might have seemed rather difficult, Wisdom and Compassion: Sacred Art of Tibet, had 147,000 visitors, more than Sickert (138,000) and not far off the National Gallery's biggest success, Edward Munch (182,000).

This was the first year that I recall major exhibitions having muzak. There was Russian chant in Gates of Mystery at the Victoria and Albert Museum, and maddening trumpets in Canaletto in England at Birmingham. However, it seems horribly likely that muzak will become more common as museums look for a wider, younger public. Just about every other human activity is now done while listening to music, so why not looking at paintings?

Happily, 1993 also brought the day closer when if you do not like the music, you do not need to go. In September, Microsoft "delivered London's National Gallery to the Desktop". A CD-Rom allows art-lovers to "search, browse, and navigate" the gallery's 2,000 paintings. It gives an animated lesson in perspective, and you on guided tours of the galleries, and teaches you how to pronounce artists' names. Give it a decade, and the world's greatest museums, palaces, cathedrals, even the blockbuster shows, will be accessible without getting off the sofa.

Just show me a painting

William Packer is fed up with current academic orthodoxy

One might well say that a year that began with the Bank Board's high-minded, mind-numbing survey of the conceptual sculpture of the early 1970s, at Hayward in January, and its stride with the narrow critical of the Barclays Young Award (now known as the Serpentine), continued with Georgia O'Keeffe at the Hayward in the spring, Richard Hamilton at the Venice and Tony Bevan at the Whitechapel in the summer, and wound up last month with

Julian Opie's play-acting at Hayward (again), the recent glories of the Turner Prize, and the present graphic battle at the Tate, Craig-Martin at Washington, and have been pretty grim. Well, up to a point it was. I am not sure whether I find the academic orthodoxy of the stuff, the polarised arguments of their critical opponents, or the work itself, the more dispiriting. It is as clear a nonsense to suppose that the Tate, for example, should only acquire work with the current effusions of the College, as that nothing of any interest will ever come from that source. The heresy is that only the supposed avant-garde of the moment can be of any creative interest. There is, of course, a great deal of excellent art of the highest quality, and minimalist and conceptual work of great beauty and imaginative potency, of course, of course. And figurative art is still with us, and the direct response to the real and perceived world will always remain as valid in creative work as any amount of theorising or conceptual posturing. Of course, of course, all so obvious. And so why is it necessary to say as much, again and again?

That said, we can cheer up, for throughout the year there have been, as always, a great deal about to do just that.

cheer up. Paris in particular, has been a great comfort, and Venice too, and London and Edinburgh not so far off the pace. Here, then, in a short space, a few plums picked from my own basket of shows I actually reviewed.

Matisse at the Centre Pompidou, show quite distinct from last year's full retrospective in New York, and the definitive review of the artist's early career. 1893, l'Europe des Peintres, at the Musée d'Orsay; the Nabis, at the Grand Palais (prematurely closed since the roof fell in); the Unknown Modigliani, at the Palazzo Grassi, doubling the canon of known drawings and transforming our understanding of the artist; the Venice Biennale's omaggio to Francis Bacon, at the Museo Correr; late Picasso's late city-scapes, at the Royal Academy; Lucian Freud's work of the last decade, at the Whitechapel; the Holbein drawings in the Royal Collection, at the National Gallery of Scotland; Dennis Creffield's Petworth paintings, at Gillian Jason; Hamish Fulton, at Annelly Juda; Graham Sutherland's early prints, at the Fine Art Society - not a year at all.

Chess No 1002:
1 Kg1 Resigns. The threat is h4+ Kh2+ 3 Qh1+ and 4 Qh6 mate.
If 1... h5 2 h4+ Kh2+ 3 Qh1+ Kg5 4 f4+ Kg4 5 Qh3 mate.
No 1001:
Three-move game: 1 e4 e5 2 Bc5 3 Bxc6 dxc6.
Four-move game: 1 e4 e5 2 Bb5 Kc7 3 Bxd7 c6 4 Bb5 Kxe6.

LAPADA presents
THE LAPADA ANTIQUES & FINE ART FAIR at
THE NATIONAL EXHIBITION CENTRE, BIRMINGHAM
19-23 JANUARY 1994
Wed/Thurs/Fri 11am - 5pm Sat/Sun 11am - 6pm
A superb presentation by 100 leading dealers and a truly captivating ambience make this one of the most memorable Antiques & Fine Art Fairs in Britain.
Exhibitors: Linda Colgate, Centre Exhibitions, N.E.C., Birmingham B40 1NT
Tel: 021 780 4141 Fax: 021 767 3540

WEST LONDON ANTIQUES FAIR
Kensington Town Hall, Hornton St. W.8.
January 13-16
Thurs/Fri 11-8. Sat/Sun 11-6
99 Stands on 3 floors
Friendly, Busy & Buyable
Penman Fairs: 071 351 9152

THE DORCHESTER ANTIQUES FAIR
THE DORCHESTER HOTEL, PARK LANE, LONDON
5TH - 9TH JANUARY 1994
Wed 12 noon - 9pm, Thurs/Fri 11am - 9pm, Sat 11am - 7pm, Sun 11am - 6pm
THE FIRST PRESTIGIOUS ANTIQUES FAIR OF 1994
Ballet Fairs are delighted to present this major new event to be held in one of the world's most famous hotels.
ENQUIRIES: TELEPHONE 0277 362662 FAX 0277 364045

French Art Week
Maurice-Quentin de La Tour (1704-1788)
Portrait of Marie Fel (1713-1794) (detail).
Sold at Christie's London on 10 December 1993 for £155,500.
CHRISTIE'S has sold great works of French Art in London since 1786. This year, we will be holding a week of sales devoted to French Art from 6-10 June 1994. It will bring together French pictures primarily of the 17th, 18th and early 19th Centuries as well as Old Master 19th Century drawings, prints, fine French furniture, clocks, tapestries and wine. The week will focus international attention on London and offers a unique opportunity to both buyers and sellers. Entries are invited and can be accepted until 15 March. For further information, please contact Kate Eckert on 071 389 2129.
CHRISTIE'S
King Street, St. James's, London SW1Y 4QT
Tel: 071 389 4041 Fax: 071 389 1011

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

PROPERTY / GARDENING

Prices start the long climb back

But don't expect anything more than a gentle recovery from recession, says Gerald Cadogan

With not a property bear in sight in 1994, happy days are here again. Or such is the gospel according to every Knight, Savill, Strutt and Wood. But is it believable? Will prices really rise by 15 per cent across the country and 25 per cent in the best parts of London as Yolande Barnes, head of Savills' residential research, prophesied before Christmas?

Certainly, gloom and bust vanished last year. The property scene turned from late autumn 1992, when foreign buyers set the central London market rolling. Spotting prices way below the peaks of 1988-90, plus a low pound, political stability and a country that looked to be the first in the EU to be coming out of recession, they bought houses and flats galore. In no time, agents were claiming they did not have enough to sell.

Last year was an odd one, partly because buying carried on into the winter but did not then follow the usual pattern of trading peaks in spring and autumn. January and February were surprisingly good, says Trevor Abrahamson of Glenfidd, which adds in the prime parts of the north-west London suburbs. So August. In between, fears about the March budget stifled the winter improvement. It stopped potential buyers from selling.

Then, the government moved to lose its grip - another blow to vendors' confidence. The surprise, June was good. And it all happened again in the autumn. While the market during summer showed continuing recovery, the second Budget in November put off any decision about selling until the spring. At least there is no looming Budget to upset confidence this year - but the increases and VAT on household energy could prove a problem.

Another twist to 1993 was the high number of repossessions caused by the recession, along with houses which stayed on the market. These were sold eventually, often at auctions - which became a regular way of selling batches of properties.

By the end of the year, prices had stabilised on average around the country, and in London (7 per cent according to Abrahamson). Bold vendors had a good chance of getting their asking prices if they were reasonable. But too much and buyers will wait, however much money they have.

For some good, highly desirable houses, the asking price came down. Eileen Aigas, the island domain in the Beaulieu river in Scotland, was sold for £1,000,000 (down from £1,200,000) in north Wiltshire, which has a topiary tree house in the garden, is £250,000 (originally, £1.2m).

All the same, there is still a large imbalance between demand and supply. That is the key to 1994, and justifies the bulls' forecasts of higher prices. Take Surrey houses, priced at £250,000 and £300,000, which had failed to sell for four years. Their owners were desperate to sell them from the market to get a better price this year.

Surrey, which led the market this recession, seems now to be pulling it out again - no wonder Barnes' forecast is so cheery. But Yorkshire is sceptical. Tim Blenkins of Blenkins & Co., Knight Frank & Rutley's associate in York, "verges on the positive side of neutral." He points out that Yorkshire's price levels have not fallen as much as elsewhere during the recession because local people did not have to sell to raise cash. Likewise, they will not raise cash.

I am a general picture of moderate cheer. In general, conditions are excellent. It is 15 years since houses have been so affordable, especially for first-time buyers who can obtain attractive packages. Mortgage interest rates and inflation are low and - much more important - look set to stay so. A fixed-rate mortgage gives certainty in financial planning for five years. And, unemployment is down, job security looks less chancy.

Memories are strong, though. If Christmas was not expected, buyers will not be stampeded into paying more for homes, either. The prices paid in 1988-90 are still on the far horizon, but they will occur in 1994 as isolated peaks.

Large end-of-year bonuses have given City workers the power to bid aggressively. That will pull a pull from the "bush fire," according to Tommy de Mallet Morgan of Savills' Guildford office. (London taxi drivers would agree. Their business, always one of the things to suffer in bad times, has picked up).

This competition will raise prices and make more vendors happy to sell, buy and commission builders (if they need them) before they put up their prices - they are bound to do now they are getting more jobs.

If we are in the valley and on the up, with the prospect of some real increases in value, I still expect wide variations across the country. Those who have waited can probably ask now that bit more. (Abrahamson expects a general rise of 10 per cent). If the market moves as a whole from Surrey, that buys a considerable house.

It will not be a boom and it will not be a bust. In most of the country, there will be a gentle recovery. Supply will give way to demand; it must. But not overnight.

Profits replace purges as demand explodes

The most famed block of flats in Moscow is a vast block across the river from the Kremlin. Known as the Government House, the House on the Embankment (the latter was the novel by Trifonov), it was built for ministers and high government officials in the 1930s.

The flats are large, airy, high and light. They were at once the summit of Soviet achievement and among the most dangerous of living quarters: when the Communist party purges started in the 1930s, the NKVD cars would, early in the morning, slip quietly into the courtyard to collect this or that senior comrade for a journey from which he did not return.

No more of that today. The stairways echo now to the self-confident conversation of expatriates speaking in English, German, French and Japanese. Many of the flats have been renovated, the wood polished, the imported Scandinavian and Italian furniture placed to best advantage.

For $3,000 a month up, you can look out on the Kremlin at night and thrill to the vicarious fantasy that the black Volga idling on the street below waits for you. But the mad scramble for profit in the Moscow housing market has replaced the NKVD as the main disturber of the peace in this and other elite blocks.

Most people in Moscow pay very small rents to their local municipality for their flats: a rent of $5 a month is high. Those who can move in with parents/children and rent their flat to foreigners for $300-plus a month thus make huge gains, and many do. But when the parents/children get fed up, the landlord usually tries to eject the tenant. The only recourse the tenant has (if he is savvy) is to threaten to enquire of the inland revenue whether the landlord is declaring his income. The threat usually ends in victory, the threat of it.

John Lloyd reports on the booming housing market in Moscow

This, though, is the low end of the market. The higher end is big money. Already, says one UK lawyer who specialises in Russian property work, elite districts are emerging in a Moscow which was officially (and, in part, actually) monochromatic as to class and income differentials.

"Patrich's Pond (near the centre) is coming up nicely," he says, "and the Lenin Hills area (where the town houses of the party bosses were). Also the Stalin Buildings (vast, Gothic fantasy blocs of which two were apartment complexes) at Vostaniya and Taganka are much sought after."

For foreigners who want to live the suburban life, private built houses are now available. "communities" constructed outside the Moscow ring road which, typically, are well-protected against increasingly self-confident criminals and have their own services and shops. Rosinka, one of the first, was pounced upon by American companies but is more mixed, while the new ones are largely for emerging Russian elites.

This new class - conspicuous in its top-of-the-range foreign cars with personal guards and luxurious clothes - constitutes a small but significant section of the population. However it gets its money, it wants to spend it rapidly. The English - or kotzedzhi, English cottages - it buys on new estates, like the Moscow Country Club or Iskrinskoye, are at $180,000 and can be three times as much.

The old ruling class had dachas, usually of wood, or "kottedzhi" estates round Moscow. The first wave of the new rich, and the first foreign dachniks, have moved into the former dachas. Now, in the new wave, they have a house with the amenities and long drives of long dacha weekends: their houses are for their families, out of the danger and dirt. The two-car garages are for the dachas; the smaller house at the foot of the garden holds the driver, coach and staff.

Like other foreigners in Moscow, I have a dacha about an hour from Moscow. It stands on an Academy of Sciences estate which once was reserved for physicists. An academy deputy-president, Nikolai Frolov, who led the wholly unsuccessful Dignity and Charity Party in the election campaign, has the dacha and drive.

For a reasonable sum (one million about rents), I have a six-room, two-storey wooden house in about 200 acres of ground, mainly wooded, sloping down to the Moscow river. It has a gas central heating, erratic light and a great comfort this. Distinguishing the elite from the proletarian (dacha) an indoor flushing toilet.

The landlady is the wife and daughter of an academic: she inherited "my" dacha from her father, while using that of Rooms with a view... a flat looking out towards St Basil's cathedral, in Red Square, could be yours - at a price her present husband. She and he, in the middle, are not creatures of another age; they are fascinating and sympathetic people. But they are typically uncomfortable, poised between regarding what they are doing - renting a house - as distasteful and trying to get as much as possible for it.

Moscow property is in the same no-man's land as all of Russia. The free market principles, backed by obvious always-present threats, prevail in the midst of a socialistic activity. It is intense: on an estate, with some 40 original wooden dachas, there are half as many again of the ones being thrown up. The remaining dachas, Frolov, has it. What have these new owners done to deserve a dwelling which took them years of endeavour?

Merely made money. But there it is.

RETIREMENT

AWARD-WINNING ENVIRONMENT

Black Country's award-winning environment. Four Daily Mail Green Awards in 1993 are the most recent in a line of achievements over 18 years reflecting our commitment to providing the best housing for your needs. From the choice of location and layout of the courtyard to the subtle use of local materials and roof tiles, we ensure that our houses blend into the landscape, enhancing the surroundings. We want you to benefit from our experience by choosing the exceptional quality of our new houses in beautiful locations throughout southern England.

Prices from £95,000 to £125,000. To find out more about our properties in Somerset, Wiltshire, Dorset and Kent, please ring us for a brochure. The English Courtyard Association, 8 Holland Street, London W1J 8JZ. FREEPHONE 0800 600000.

COUNTRY PROPERTY

One of the most prestigious residential areas in the UK - the KIRTS OF LONDON.

COPPERFIELDS

A LUXURY 5 BEDROOM RESIDENCE (WITH GUEST ROOM) OF HIGH QUALITY IN A UNIQUE & SECURED LOCATION. Built in security in house and grounds. Price £295,000. WARD HOMES (0634) 855111 for details.

SOUTH DEVON

THE SOUTH HAMS WATERFRONT

A detached stone built barn. Conditional p.p. for conversion & extension to provide 3/4 bed residence with garage & crockery. G.E.F.A. 2,375 sq. ft. GOOD SHELTER, NEAR SALCOMBE. For Sale by Contractual Tender. Option 2 Lot 4 of 10. Price from 450,000 FF. Tel: UK (0) 322 1111.

LUSCOMBE WAYE (0458) 857474

INTERNATIONAL

PROPERTY

LONDON

RENTALS

SALES, LETTINGS, MANAGEMENT

WHY RISK CALLING ANYONE ELSE?

TO LET BY OWNER

2 bed unfinished flat in residential block 200 yards from St Paul's Cathedral for 6/12 mo this.

Tel: 071 248 0740

SW1 - ONE BED PIED-A-TERRER. Superb location just off Jermyn St. 2350 pcm. To include H/W & heating. Tel. 0929 254280

LONDON PROPERTY

NEW YEAR SPECIAL. Avoid the

Buy in the City. Studios £55,000, 1 bed £75,000. Free. Tel: 071 890 7029

MERIBEL - four very high luxury staffed £8500-£9950 pw. Tel: 071 499 7517

Traditional edge to the Sloane-Walleys' year

Robin Lane Fox looks in on the festive season at the Old Rectory

Down in Sussex Old Rectory, Julian and Veronica Sloane-Walley have spent a wet and windy week recovering from their annual bout of competitive present giving. They are relaxed by now of seven years' country living since the move from Onslow Gardens in Chelsea at an unwise point in the property market in 1980. By tradition, with Christmas the other for the best expected present which will be Truly Useful in the coming year.

Julian, fortunately, had resisted the temptation of the main window of Peter Jones, the up-market department store in London's Sloane Square, was not to be taken the sight of Her Ladyship's Christmas Garden (which appeared to amount to a packet of parsley, a plastic tree and a nostalgic box for the Natural Herbal Reviver) as the West Country who is behind with the Weeding, Crooked with the Edges, Late with Pruning and has Grass in the Path...

Maternity has not always brought harmony in the Sloane-Walleys' gardening and there are times when Julian wishes Veronica was not so dabbly green. Apart from three proper meals a day, he insists on little in life except exemption from equestrian duties, properly clipped edges to the lawn and weed-free paths. He often thinks Veronica is being deliberately awkward when she refuses to use weed killers "in the country."

This year, he believes he has finally outwitted the yearly problem of the Old Rectory path. While visiting his bank in Mayfair, Julian happened to notice London's most familiar plant: the drizzle, compressor and lorry of the capital's leading Irish engineer, whose workmen were hacking up the pavement when not in a table Sloane-Walley was a man in a white apron. Mayfair is not Chelsea Gardens, but Julian had now found a way to get paving stones in situ. In the last year, he had been in the Rectory while managing to persuade Veronica that he has in this time of year because British Rail is being disrupted by gales and the hazard of twice as the track. With Veronica's help, he had managed to get the paving will make an excellent path and as a personal coup, Julian's recognition of Veronica's nostalgia for the London pavements, a nostalgia increased by seven years with the children's pony in an over-brooked corner of Sussex. At least he can now walk out on a carpet of old Mayfair, if not Chelsea, when the slabs are pointed property, there will be no argument about spraying and applying weed-killer while Veronica is out shopping at the local freezer centre.

Freezer shopping, in fact, has taken a different role in the Sloane-Walley year. In January, Veronica became fed up with all the bills of the Rectory and decided to earn her keep by fee-paying demonstrations. (Julian did annoy her by asking if they were to be demonstrations of pony management by a Londoner, as neither of them is proud of the fact that the old family pony, Peter Jones, has suffered twice from mud fever since the rain started again last summer).

Veronica had set her sights on cooking, in his belief, country dinner parties are now dominated by exactly the same recipes from the book by Raymond Blanc. Since its launch this spring, Onslow has been a roaring success. Half the housewives in the turn out to be as fed up during commuting hours as she is, and the sessions have developed a pleasantly therapeutic give-and-take. Veronica has given the man recipes which she can recycle to customers on every week's course.

In July, she suffered the loss of every small business days which meant to sprout green an uninvited visit from the health and safety inspector. The kitchen passed muster, largely because she sent Harvey and Nichols, her pair of Jack Russell terriers, away to her mother for the week before inspection. The problem was the plumbing.

Julian had been adamant that he did not want an invasion of his home's WC by fee-paying customers, and insisted they must use the outdoor lavatory adjoining the tool shed. A stone's throw from the kitchen door. But under Section 89A of the Health and Safety (Enforcement) Act of 1990, it is not permissible for commercial premises to offer toilet facilities in a detached or separate building unless that building is connected to the point of office egress by an approved shelter.

Veronica tried to butter up the inspector, but he only became more truculent when she gave him a quick sketch of a possible wooden pergola at the back of an Onslow menu. Then he struck a mortal blow by asking if the rectory was listed building.

In a fit of domestic exhibitionism, Julian had recently drawn the arguable merits of its late-Victorian facade to the local conservation officer, and had succeeded in having it listed grade II - the ground that this would enhance its market value. This meant that Veronica's plan would have to be before the local council's planning committee before HM Inspector could clear it for health.

In August, the committee rejected the pergola on the grounds that it would be standing in a listed context and, in keeping with Sussex period vernacular, the connecting passage would have to be tiled. Veronica has already written to John Major about urgent need for his party to prune the undergrowth it has introduced.

She did, however, her other hat and point out to the planners that the Old Rectory garden had undergone extensive landscaping without any mention of "period vernacular." Since she now opened it as a Gardening Sunday, she regarded herself as fully entity build a pergola, not a tile-hung extension. In order to the objections to her unobjectionable loo. The planning committee was predictably weary, but called for a planting scheme which it could consider a decision.

In October, Veronica sketched in her suggestions. Old Sloane-Walley favourites like the yellow-leaved chrysanthemum and the Golden Churn for evergreen colour in winter. She added "VSW Fecit" to her artist's impression and off, expecting to be able to give Julian the unexpected present of planning approval on Christmas day.

Five days after Christmas, she received a buff envelope. The environmental health department was satisfied, with the proviso that the pergola be a berry-bearing shrub and must be certified as non-poisonous; but the chairman of the planning committee, the clerk who wrote that he himself was a keen gardener, that he kept abreast of the art for years by reading the end of 77; and that every one of his proposals was unsuitable - vulgar, as he frank - in a grade II setting.

Veronica wrote at once to the Royal Horticultural Society's garden at Wisley, Surrey - where she had the plants - and asked for a letter supporting her choices. In her annoyance, she also saw chance for a New Year present which Julian probably wanted and expected least.

For years, she had banned Julian from having the FT on a Saturday because, she said, it belonged in the office, not the home. She changed tack, wanting ammunition against the planners; and from today, she cancelled the Telegraph and given Julian a year's subscription to the paper he has wanted for years. She, meanwhile, will take the chance to discover how on earth, in this day and age, a Sussex planning committee dare to be Sloane-Walley they are being horticulturally correct.

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

FINANCE AND THE FAMILY

An upbeat outlook for private investors

Philip Coggan finds that leading fund managers see declining interest rates and increasing economic growth as the keys for 1994

Will 1994 be a good year for private investors? The Financial Times leading fund managers for their views on the major markets - the UK, US, Japan and Europe. All were fairly optimistic, with the main themes being declining interest rates and an improved pace of economic growth.

MICHAEL HART, of Foreign & Colonial
"I am hopeful that the major markets will again make progress in 1994, after the good rises of 1993. The big question for investors at present is whether interest rates will continue to decline. In Germany, rates will be affected by higher interest rates in the UK. The depressed state of the German economy means that interest rates there have further to fall.

"Recently, the US economy has been recovering strongly. If this were to continue, higher rates would be justified - and markets are already reacting to a 1 per cent increase. However, there are good reasons to believe that US economic growth will be slower than in 1993. Higher rates in the pipeline and savings are low, while inflation is high. These factors, coupled with a low inflation outlook, may stop interest rates rising much further.

"It is possible that with a favourable interest rate background and improving profits, and rationalised prospects, the FT-SE 100 index could climb further despite present high valuations.

"For Wall Street, I am concerned that the market has been rising without a 10 per cent rally for the longest period in its history. Inevitably, some will see the blue chip as the market, if only temporarily. But low interest rates, low inflation and rising profits could see the Dow 10 per cent above present levels at the end of 1994.

"Although share price valuations are high, falling interest rates, good prospects of profits recovery and the greater confidence of investors for equities could make the major European markets higher - possibly 15 per cent above present levels.

"At present, the Japanese market is completely lacking in Japan and the market is low - it could be a good time to buy. Japan may be one of the better markets in 1994, with a possible gain of at least 20 per cent.

"In the emerging markets, Russia and India are probably the best bets, with gains of 50 per cent or more in the major markets.

TIM THOMAS, of Guinness Flight
"In 1992 and 1993, it was easy to advise clients to do with spare cash. Take it out of the building society and put it into any financial asset - bonds or equities - in the UK or overseas. But now the market is more volatile, and we are entering 1994.

"In my opinion, as regards main-line markets, the answer is yes. But it is possible that markets will reach a peak this year which would make them vulnerable to significant falls (more like the fall of October 1989 than the crash of 1987). Markets are high but valuations are low; and with the exception of the US, where we expect rates to start to rise in the first quarter of 1994, are likely to go lower on a world-wide basis. This will keep equity and non-US bond markets rising as investors shift portfolios away from cash.

"Following the sharp rise in the Budget, the FT-SE 100 equity market should put in a strong performance in 1994, possibly reaching 3,750 on the FT-SE 100, while interest rates fall to 5 per cent. Europe, where the economy has not yet started recovering, should rise 15-20 per cent over the year, with Italy possibly being the best performer.

"Japan should see some hopeful economic signs and this could lift the market substantially, but the currency will slip against the US dollar, although it will enjoy a small rise versus sterling. The Far Eastern markets are likely to continue to attract money as the 'hot' growth area of the world and price/earnings multiples will expand several points, providing 20 per cent plus returns in local currency and more in sterling terms.

"The US market, with the economy strong and rates starting to rise, may be a relatively poor performer (offering returns of, say, 10 per cent) but should benefit from a resurgent dollar, which could reach $1.25/£. So, 1994 should be another good year for investors; but, by 1995, the easy money may have been made."

DAVID BOSHER, of Mercury Asset Management

"In 1994, we believe that, for the fourth year in a row, there will be modest overall world economic growth. We expect inflation to remain low and, consequently, believe there is more scope for falls in interest rates. We, therefore, expect further progress in both equity and bond markets. Nevertheless, there will be periodic worries that either growth will slow or that inflationary pressures are emerging. Volatile stock markets are likely.

"There remains further upside in the UK stock market in the context of a moderate but sustained economic growth and low inflation. The market is attractively valued relative to continental Europe.

"Clearly, the forecast of a lower than anticipated public sector borrowing requirement in the Budget has added to the surprise. With gilt yields declining, the attraction of equities has increased. However, after its recent progress, it is likely that the UK market will consolidate in the short term until further evidence emerges of a recovery in corporate earnings.

"We would recommend an under-weighting in the Italian States, where the market will no longer be supported by interest rate falls. Indeed, interest rates there may rise upwards as the Federal Reserve Board seeks to control the rate of US economic growth, allowing the dollar to strengthen.

"In Japan, it is probable that corporate profits will show little recovery in 1994, even before major corporate restructuring. We believe the authorities there may not respond sufficiently quickly to a further deterioration in the economy. In this situation, you should remain a preferred asset class and there could be some delay in the anticipated weakening of the yen.

"Continental European markets should benefit from further interest rate declines. However, valuations are high and there is scope for disappointment with local economic growth and corporate earnings.

"Finally, we believe that the outstanding growth prospects in the emerging markets will be the result of the G-7 agreement to provide a further $10 billion in aid to the Pacific basin and emerging markets. Evidence suggests that investors will want to increase their exposure to them, providing further support."

COLIN McLEAN, of Scottish Value Management

"I think 1994 will confound the pessimists, since growth in the global economy is accelerating and there is little sign of inflationary pressures. Most of the surprises should be favourable - with Japan eventually responding to a monetary stimulus, and interest rates continuing to fall in continental Europe. The weak oil price gives a further boost to global growth prospects, while underlining the deflationary pressure.

"Less US monetary policy is feeding dollars into financial markets rather than the real economy. This has been the right policy to pull the US out of recession, but it has also caused inflation in the markets, such as south east Asia.

"Even so, liquidity-driven markets are not yet a recipe for a repeat of 1987. Indeed, one of the surprises could be that the growth will pick up further - but without the inflationary signals that would require the Fed to tighten. In this environment, US market valuations do not yet seem over-stretched.

"The search for growth in the Far East is continuing to pile pressure on Far Eastern markets. Not only should the tiger economies perform well, but Japan also has the potential for a rebound.

"It took some time to kick-start the US economy, and so Japan's sluggishness is not surprising. Japan's recovery will be a long haul, but the present level of the Nikkei under-values the economy's inherent strengths and the likely turnaround in the coming year.

"With unemployment still the major issue in Europe, further interest rate cuts are likely. This prospect should underpin European markets, such as Germany and Italy. And US money will flow into Europe - attracted by privatisations and the region's potential as a late cycle investment.

"I am believe that US shares will have a good year, although many more profits warnings will be needed to bridge the gap between the overall outlook of slow growth and optimistic company forecasts.

"The risks are in sectors that seem bargains - such as food retailing - where profits estimates are still too optimistic. 1994 could remind us what an earnings-driven market is like. After easy gains from widespread re-ratings, investment performance is now likely to be driven by earnings surprise."

Now there's an easier way to invest in European
privatisations.

Just as in the UK, governments all over Europe are looking to privatisation to increase efficiency and raise revenue.

Now you can too.

Estimates suggest that there will be £100 billion worth of privatisation offers in Europe in the next five years alone.

The new Kleinwort European Privatisation Trust is your chance to take advantage: simply, economically and with professional fund managers to pick and choose the best opportunities from a whole host of financial, energy, telecommunications and other essential state-owned industries.

To register for a prospectus, which will be available from 11th January, simply call our Investment Trust Helpline during office hours on 071 956 5832.

Or make a single trip to your local post-box and send us the coupon below.

To: Giles Hardy,
Kleinwort Benson Investment Trusts,
10 Fenchurch Street, London EC3A 3LF.

Please register me for a prospectus for the Kleinwort European Privatisation Trust.

Name _____
Address _____
Postcode _____

Kleinwort Benson
INVESTMENT TRUSTS

Division of Kleinwort Benson Investment Management Limited
A Member of DBDO and the London Stock Exchange Past performance is not necessarily a guide to the future and share prices can fall as well as rise. You may not be able to recover the full amount invested. Changes in rates of exchange may also cause the value of the investment to go up or down.
Warrants have the potential for higher capital appreciation than shares but in the same time their market value is subject to significant volatility, and this may result in a disproportionately large movement, down as well as up, in the price of the warrant.

How do you keep up with an expanding Europe?

Europe's essential online business information service from the Financial Times.

Now that the single market is a reality, the need for business information... on markets, on your competitors, on European legislation... has become more urgent.

So how do you keep up with all of the changes? And how do you separate the useful information from the time-wasting trivia?

You need FT PROFILE.

As a Financial Times reader, you already know where to turn for authoritative reporting on the issues and events that influence European business. FT PROFILE draws on this authority and on hundreds of other equally important information sources to give you the facts you need - in seconds.

FT PROFILE is easy to use.

All you need is a PC, a phone line and access to FT PROFILE. It helps you sift through the millions of pieces of available information for the facts that can make the difference between a good guess and an informed decision.

To learn more about how FT PROFILE can enhance your perspective on business in Europe and the world, call us now, or simply complete and return the coupon...

FT PROFILE, P.O. Box 12,
Sunbury, Middlesex, TW16 7UD,
Great Britain. Tel: +44 932 761444.

Financial Times Information Services,
Nibelungenplatz 3, 60118 Frankfurt/Main,
Germany. Tel: 069/15 685 - 113.

Financial Times Information Services,
Bureau De Vente Paris, 168 Rue De Rivoli, 75001 Paris, France. (1) 42 97 10.

Name _____
Job Title _____
Company _____
Nature of business _____
Address _____
Postcode _____ Telephone _____
Country _____

No. of employees ☐ under 50 ☐ 50 to 100 ☐ over 100
I already use online ☐ Yes ☐ No

FT PROFILE
THE FINANCIAL TIMES INFORMATION SERVICE

PART OF THE FINANCIAL TIMES GROUP

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

FINANCE AND THE FAMILY

CHESS

Since Gary Kasparov became the first chess multi-millionaire, hundreds of ex-Soviet chess players have flocked to tournaments in western Europe with golden dreams. Paradoxically, the player most likely to succeed, and who Kasparov himself has named his heir apparent, has renounced his champion's executive lifestyle and market philosophy.

Vladimir Kramnik, 23 and world No 5, told a reporter: "I want to concentrate on chess, not financial speculation." Kramnik has just finished in the top seven in the PCA world championship qualifier, Groningen. He will play in the PCA candidates' matches next year. If he defeats Leonid Yudashin of Israel in their FIDE candidates' match next month, he will be on course for a double title challenge in Kasparov and Anatoly Karpov.

Here Kramnik demonstrates a newly fashionable opening idea (V Kramnik, White; J Horvath, Black; Austrian League 1993).

play) ... a rook ...

Solution Page XI

Leonard Barden

BRIDGE

A happy new year to all my readers. Today's hand is from the 1994 bridge. I have the cussed this hand before but it contains an important play:

N
K 9 8
10 9 8
K 10 9 8
5 5 3

W
J 7 5
8 4
7 4 2
Q J 10 9 8

E
Q 10 4 2
J 7 5 3 2
A J 6 5

South dealt at a love score and opened with two clubs. North gave the negative response of one diamond and South rebid two no-trumps. North, holding one king, raised to three no-trumps and all passed.

West opened with the club queen and declarer was forced when East showed out, throwing a bomb - the club suit was worth only two tricks. There were eight tricks for the taking and declarer showed the only hope for the ninth. At trick two, declarer led the diamond queen, which was allowed to win - if East wins, South gets three. Following with the three, South loses the 10, losing in the knave, which was inevitable. Could declarer have made the contract? Yes. Let us replay the hand. Take West's club queen and lead not the queen of diamonds but the three, and finesse the 10. If East does not take, return a diamond to the queen, setting up the vital second trick. East takes and returns a heart to our ace. Now play the diamond queen and overtake it with the king. East wins and again leads a heart, but we cross to the king and cash the two diamond diamonds and claim nine tricks.

E.P.C. Cotter

CROSSWORD

No. 8,343 Set by DINMUTZ

A prize of a classic Palladium Souvenir 800 fountain pen, inscribed with the winner's name for the first correct solution opened and runner-up prizes of 250 Pounds vouchers. Solutions by Wednesday January 12, marked Crossword 8,343 on the envelope, to the Financial Times, Number One Southwark Bridge, London SE1 9HL. Solution on Saturday January 15.

Name _____ Address _____

- ACROSS
- Interperse new (11)
 - Prepared for attack (3)
 - One knocks things down, having collapsed to the (4)
 - To conduct band, one needs (4)
 - Directing action (5-4)
 - If new ground, possibly (4)
 - Square cut into river (4)
 - Doctor binds (4) drugs from bed (7)
 - Alimony just spoken (4)
 - Wishes told in dispute (4)
 - Some enter, mind-buses in (4)
 - Touching a match? (5)
 - Gratulate's first messed up, yet was (4) (9)
 - People in (4), we hear, send regards around Tyneside (9)
 - Dianna's alter ego? (5)
 - Frank understood (4)
 - Shooting-breaker? (5-5)
- DOWN
- Encourage principals (4)
 - On at Lord's (4) upset (4)
 - From central Philadel- (4)
 - Wantonly ignores the prov- (4)
 - Butterfly expert, possibly? (7)
 - Was in the origin of (4)
 - Butterfly expert, possibly? (7)
 - Score matched (4) ends of (4)
 - Drill sergeant's bulk (4)
 - There is (4) (4) intelli- (4)
 - Garden (4) (4) (4) (4)
 - From day (4) (4) (4) (4)
 - Double rehearsed (4) jumper (4)
 - Touch-type? (7)
 - Doctor's note? (4)

Solution 8,343

WINNERS 4,330: N. Stone, Leamington, Surrey; M. Cook, Corby, Northants; Mrs R.B. Lawrence, Scotland; East Sussex; P. Lawson, Farnham, Dorset; Dr P. Price, Rushington, Essex; D. Watkins, Long Eaton, Nottingham.

M&G is eliminating the 4.5 per cent initial charge on its Managed Income fund personal equity plan and will introduce "back end" charges instead, leaving 1.5 per cent annual unchanged.

Peps allow investors to shelter up to £100,000 in a general plan during a tax year and a further £100,000 in a single company plan, of which M&G and capital gains tax. The tax benefits of a Pep have been weighed against charges which plan M&G levy. Since M&G is the largest Pep provider, the move is bound to heat up an already competitive market.

Explaining the reasons for removing the initial charge, marketing director Peter Ennis said: "We believe that as well as providing good value, this move will make the Managed Income fund a more straightforward investment and, thereby, provide an added attraction to people who have invested in a Pep."

Those who are used to deposit-based investments can be put off when they see that their initial investment of, say, £1,000, would fall to £955 as soon as they made the Pep investment. M&G is hoping to make the Pep attractive by investing the full £1,000 and imposing early withdrawal charges instead.

M&G's fee surprise

These are common in the US and were introduced for the first time on a UK Pep by Fidelity 18 months ago. Since equities are a long-term investment, back-end charges are a better idea than initial charges for investors; by holding on in the Pep for long enough - usually only five years - it is possible to escape the charge altogether.

Those who have their Managed Income fund Pep within the first year of taking it will have a 4.5 per cent charge, which falls to 4 per cent in the second year. The charge drops by 1 percentage point each successive year, so that after five years the fifth year of investment will not face one at all.

Under present rules, unit trusts cannot impose an exit fee, but this is not the case under Pep regulations.

Although this is the first initial Pep charge reduction by M&G, plenty of other investment funds have implemented reductions. When M&G launched the fund last February, Cazenove and Fidelity released high income funds, both with lower charges. The Cazenove Bond Utility fund had an initial charge of only 0.2 per cent and an annual charge of 0.5 per cent, although M&G wanted to hold the fund in Pep form paid a further initial charge of £35.

The initial charge for Fidelity's High Income fund was 2 per cent, in line with the front-end reduction it had introduced months earlier, although M&G's annual charge remained relatively high at 1.25 per cent.

The initial charge on Murray Johnstone's unit trust Pep is 1 per cent; Gartmore, it is 1 per cent (Gartmore's UK All-Share fund, which tracks the FT-All-Share Index, has no initial charge and a 1 per cent annual charge).

Equitable replaced the initial 1 per cent charge on the Peps with a flat-fee of £1 plus VAT, and introduced withdrawal charges for those who sell in the first five years. But it imposed an annual Pep fee of 0.5 per cent on top of its annual management fee.

Among other trusts, Touche Remnant's Smaller Companies Pep has no front-end or annual fees. Martin Currie has flat-fee Peps, based on four of its investment trusts.

Although cutting the initial charge does not eliminate the bid-offer spread, it will be reduced to only 0.5 per cent (the level of stamp duty) in M&G's case.

M&G has not yet decided whether to remove the initial charge on Peps in its Managed Income fund because it has been its most popular Pep. At the end of November, 10 months after its launch, the Pep had pulled in £95m.

The performance of all three income funds launched last February has been similar. In the six months to December 1, M&G's Managed Income and Cazenove's Utility Bond fund have grown by 13.5 per cent, while Fidelity's High Income fund has increased by 15 per cent (offer to offer, income re-invested; see Hardwick Stafford Wright).

In the end, performance is more important than charges. But if two fund managers are equally good, the one who provides the fund with the lower charges will provide a better return to the investor.

Scheherazade Daneshkhu

New investment trusts target Europe

Investors who profited from the UK government's privatisation programme may be tempted by the offer of small shareholdings in the coming European privatisation programme, writes Philip Cogan.

Kleinwort's European Privatisation Investment Trust, in its prospectus on January 11, will offer investors the chance to buy partly-paid shares, with 50 per cent payable on application and the rest 12 months later. The minimum investment is £2,000.

According to Kleinwort, around 100 European privatisation trusts are expected to be launched in Europe stock markets over the next five years. The main targets are expected to be France, Italy and Spain. As well as the expected utilities, companies in banking, insurance and other sectors will be available. There are, however, a number of problems for UK private investors who want to buy shares in foreign companies, for example, the foreign currency risk, the need to open a foreign bank account, and withholding tax on dividends. An investment trust can overcome these barriers.

Mercury Management's European Privatisation Trust will be launched in February. Like the Kleinwort issue, it will have warrants attached to it, a one-for-five ratio and will be payable. Full details of the Mercury Trust will be available but the price will be 100p and the annual management fee less than 1 per cent; Kleinwort's fee will be 0.75 per cent.

Patience brings its own reward.

So a little patience ought to bring, well, a little more reward.

The guaranteed rate of return if you hold your Series H Capital Bonds for five years, is equal to 7.25% pa compound.

Gross interest is added to the value of your bond each year. It is taxable, so it should be declared on your tax form. Non-taxpayers though keep the lot.

You can invest any amount from £100 up to £250,000.

If this is the sort of opportunity you've been waiting for, don't delay, post the application form now. We pay the postage.

Your cheque should be crossed "A/C Payee" and made payable to NATIONAL SAVINGS (CAPITAL BONDS) using CAPITAL letters for this part of the cheque.

Please write your name and address on the back of the cheque.

Post your completed application form and cheque to National Savings (CB), Freepost GW 3276, GLASGOW G58 1BR.

If, before applying, you would like more information or a prospectus, phone free on 0800 868 700 between 9am and 4.30pm Monday to Friday. Application forms and prospectuses will be available at post offices from 10 January 1994.

Capital Bonds are subject to the terms of the prospectus. Please note that your application can only be accepted if the Series you ask for is on sale when we receive it. You can use this coupon to buy by post. When we receive your completed application form and cheque we will send you your Bond together with a copy of the prospectus. We will send them to you within 14 days. The purchase date will be the date we receive your application. If receiving the Bond and the prospectus you wish to cancel your purchase tell us in writing within 28 days, and we will refund your money (but please note that interest is payable on a cancelled purchase). Post Office purchases do not qualify for the 28 days cancellation period.

Interest will be credited to your Bond each year. At the end of five years we will pay back your capital with all the interest earned. Lower rates of interest are paid on early repayment. No interest is paid on cashed in before the first anniversary of purchase; thereafter the rates will be as specified in paragraph 18 of the prospectus. So, if you choose to make partial withdrawals you will receive a lower rate of interest on the amount withdrawn, thereby reducing your overall return.

Please note that the maximum holding in Capital Bonds is £250,000 excluding any holding in Series A.

After five years, £10,000 in Capital Bonds becomes £14,190.
Some things are worth waiting for.

When completed please send this form with your cheque to National Savings (CB) FREEPOST GW 3276, Glasgow G58 1BR. If you prefer, use a first class stamp for rapid delivery.

NATIONAL SAVINGS CAPITAL BONDS Series H Application to purchase

1 I apply for a Bond (subject to the terms of the prospectus) to the value of £ (Minimum purchase £100)

2 If you already have a National Savings Capital Bond insert Holder's Number

Please use CAPITAL letters

3 Mr Surname (Mr, Mrs, Miss, Ms)
All forenames
Address
Postcode

Date of birth Day Month Year (Essential under 7)

4 Signature
Date Daytime telephone number (useful if there is a query)

NATIONAL SAVINGS
SECURITY HAS NEVER BEEN SO INTERESTING.

This form cannot be used to purchase a Bond at a post office

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

FINANCE AND THE FAMILY

The accent is now on enterprise

Maurice Parry-Wingfield and Neil Sharman on the BES's successor

From today, the business expansion scheme (BES) will be replaced by the enterprise investment scheme (EIS), a switch designed to help unquoted trading companies. Investors in the new scheme will receive tax relief of only 20 per cent compared with relief at their marginal rate for BES investments. As with the BES, the investors must keep the shares for five years to secure the tax relief. Capital gains will be tax-free, but, unlike the BES, capital losses may be set against income tax or capital gains tax.

From the tax year 1994-95, an investor will be able to get relief on total investments of £100,000 - an amount which could secure a tax refund of £20,000 (the maximum under the BES was £16,000). This level of investment would clearly represent a significant exposure to the high-risk venture capital market.

An investor can take an active involvement in an EIS company through a paid directorship. But an existing entrepreneur looking for new funds would not be able to provide them through the EIS because the scheme applies only to shareholdings of less than 30 per cent.

How attractive is the EIS?

The risk for investors who are involved in the running of a company may be less than for those who do not. This underlines the fundamental axiom of new business ventures: that personal capital has to be put at risk. The EIS might, therefore, encourage entrepreneurs to risk their own capital, but only for new ventures and only where they limit their investment to 30 per cent. The relief against income tax or capital gains tax for a loss on the first disposal helps only in sweetening a bitter pill.

For the pure investor, the EIS provides the opportunity to invest greater funds in riskier ventures, with only limited potential for the security of property backing, while getting lower tax relief. For both new and existing companies, it provides a chance to raise further equity funds; the maximum is now £1m a year.

Details of the restrictions to be placed on the level of property ownership have not yet been announced. While it is reasonable to restrict the value of property, such restrictions were a major hindrance to new business ventures using the BES. Indeed, they caused some operations, such as hotels, to take an unnecessary offsetting debt burden to allow the scheme to be used. Many entrepreneurs would welcome an easing of the property restrictions to allow business decisions to be made on fundamental grounds.

The EIS is likely to result in higher funding costs than the BES as investors demand higher returns to compensate for higher risk and promoters' fees are increased to reflect the difficulty of attracting investors.

Conclusions

The EIS is welcome. It could provide much-needed equity capital and investment opportunities, but it needs greater flexibility than the BES provided for trading companies.

HIGHEST RATES FOR YOUR MONEY
Account	Telephone	Notice/term	Minimum deposit	Rate %	Int. paid
INSTANT ACCESS A/cs
Coventry BS	0203 252277	Instant	£1,000	6.50% ^{AB}	Yy
Shipton BS	0756 700511	Instant	£2,000	6.75%	Yy
Northern Rock BS	0500 505000	Instant	£10,000	6.85%	Yy
NOTICE A/cs and BONDS
North of England BS	Edinburgh 30	30 Day	£25,000	6.95%	Yy
City & Metropolitan BS	Super 60	60 Day	£10,000	6.80%	Yy
Teachers' BS	Minister 90	90 Day	£1,000	6.50%	Yy
Chelsea BS	Base Rate Plus II	1-4-95	£5,000	7.50% ^{AB}	Yy
MONTHLY INTEREST
Coventry BS	0203 252277	Instant	£1,000	6.30% ^{AB}	My
Britannia BS	0638 391741	Instant	£10,000	6.35%	My
Coventry BS	0203 252277	Instant	£25,000	6.85% ^{AB}	My
Chorley & District BS	0257 275373	90 Day	£25,000	7.05%	My
TESSA's (Tax Free)
Dudley BS	0364 231414	5 Year	£10	7.57%	Yy
Hinckley & Rugby BS	0455 251234	5 Year	£25	7.75%	Yy
West Bromwich BS	021 525 7070	5 Year	£150	7.50%	Yy
Durham BS	0383 721521	5 Year	£5,000	7.55%	Yy
HIGH INTEREST CHEQUE A/cs (Gross)
Caledonian Bank	HICA	Instant	£1	5.00%	Yy
Chelsea BS	Classic Postal	Instant	£2,500	6.00%	Yy
Northern Rock	Current	Instant	£50,000	6.85%	My
OFFSHORE ACCOUNTS (Gross)
Woolwich Quayside BS	Woolwich Int	Instant	£200	5.75%	Yy
Continent Bank (Irish)	Flexible Int	60 Day	£10,000	7.00%	WYy
			£25,000	7.50%	WYy
			£50,000	7.75%	WYy
GUARANTEED INCOME BONDS (Net)
Consolidated Life FN	061 940 8343	1 Year	£2,000	4.30%	Yy
Prosperity Life FN	0800 321548	2 Year	£25,000	4.75%	Yy
Financial Assurance FN	081 367 6000	3 Year	£50,000	5.25%	Yy
Financial Assurance FN	081 367 6000	4 Year	£50,000	5.55%	Yy
Reliance Mutual FN	0892 510033	5 Year	£5,000	5.70%	Yy
NATIONAL SAVINGS A/cs & BONDS (Gross)
(w.e.f. 29/1/94)
NAT SAVINGS CERTIFICATES (Tax Free)
41st Issue	5 Year	£100	5.40% ^{AB}	OM
7th Index Linked	5 Year	£100	3.00%	OM
Childrens Bond F	5 Year	£25	7.35% ^{AB}	OM

This table covers major banks and Building Societies only. All rates (except Guaranteed Income Bonds) are shown Gross. Fixed & Flexible Rate (All other rates are variable) OM = Interest paid on maturity. N = Not Flexible. A = Rate guaranteed to be 1.5% above base rate (min 7.5%) until 2.4.94 and then 1% until maturity. B = 10 days loss of interest on all withdrawals. Rate guaranteed to be 28.2.94. G = 5.75 per cent on balances of £2500 and over. 6.00 per cent on £25,000 plus. H = 6.75 per cent on balances of £25,000 and over. I = 6.40 per cent on balances of £25,000 and over.

Sources: MONEYFACTS, The Monthly Guide to Investment and Mortgage Rates, Laundry Lane, North Walsham, Norfolk, NR28 0BD. Readers can obtain a complimentary copy by phoning 0892 500677.

The success of the BES was very much limited to the private rented housing sector.

The chancellor of the exchequer may be optimistic in his estimates of the sums which could be raised - nearly £500m before April 1997 - particularly if the new rules bar many of the features of BES issues, such as being able to provide a form of assured exit. As the EIS will be restricted to trading companies, it would be more attractive if investors could borrow, with full risk recourse, to fund their investments (this was outlawed for BES issues) and were able to receive their dividends in a tax-free form. It would be nice to see the EIS providing the seed for tomorrow's larger companies rather than restricting horizons.

Maurice Parry-Wingfield is a tax partner, and Neil Sharman a senior manager, with Touche Ross & Co.

If the shoe fits...

Since the passing of the FSA (Footwear Services Act), shoe wearers and their feet are protected from the unscrupulous salesman. Witness the care and diligence displayed by the footwear adviser.

Client: I'd like to try on that pair of shoes.

Footwear Adviser: If I may say so, madam, before we investigate that particular pair, we must establish your foot-wearing circumstances and objectives: after all, it might be that you need cycling shoes or wellington boots or silver slippers or...

C: Sorry, I haven't time for all that. Those should fit the bill or rather, my feet.

FA: We must take nothing for granted, madam. After all, you wouldn't thank me for selling you slippers if you needed mountaineering boots.

C: True, but I know what I want.

FA: But do you know what you need? Do you need what you want? Our duty is to your needs.

C: Okay, I need those shoes...

FA: Standing before madam is an experienced professional adviser - yet madam prefers madam's amateur hunch! Has madam passed the Footwear Adviser's Competency Test?

C: Isn't that simply multiple choice - with questions such as where should shoes be put on? Hands, mosque, bathtub, feet?

FA: Now, now - life under the sole of the FSA is to madam's advantage. No more pre-FSA days of blisters and bunions - of which-shod businessmen - and...

C: Please, can't I just buy those shoes?

FA: I could accept the order as an execution-only, but my head's on the line - or, rather, under the boot. I'm allowed only one year, but if you insist...

C: Excellent - I'll try one on. One's in the window.

FA: Oups, sorry! By displaying you, so execution-only is impossible. Mind you, it's a left shoe in the window; I could let you have the right one execution-only.

C: But not the left?

FA: No, we'd need a fact-finder on your left foot. It will be difficult to leave the right one execution-only.

C: You win! Let's answer your questionnaire - it can't take long.

FA: Indeed not; we'll have our next meeting in three weeks, when your personalised footwear report is ready.

C: You mean I can't buy the shoes today?

FA: Think of the complexities - of insteps, style, fashion statements, laces. What appears right to you might not really be right for you.

C: But why do you need to again, weren't you. Look, here's a pair recommended for you.

C: They're not shaped in the way I...

FA: Beware the "W" word, madam.

C: I mean - their shape fails to satisfy the needs of my desires and they're far too expensive.

FA: Come, come madam, do not be fooled by price. Prize your feet, not the cost. You'll also need the winter-wear recommendations on page 18. Your children must have...

C: This will cost thousands. I don't like this pair.

FA: See how well these shoes are projected to perform for the next 30 years.

C: For so long? Perhaps they are worth buying.

FA: Mind you, the projections are mythical with assumptions about pavements walked and...

C: Still, they must give some idea of what I'd be getting for my money.

FA: Not quite, madam. The illustrations are not based on these shoes and costs; they derive from an average abstract shoe, unworn by mortals.

C: But it says here that the past is no guide to the future, so why are we discussing any of this? Why were you asking me about past walking habits?

FA: Ah, the FSA regulatory bodies say...

C: I've heard enough. I'm going!

FA: But this form needs completion with your friends' names - purely because you might walk out together.

Regrettably the adviser failed to recognise the adviser's professionalism. But not all was lost for the shoe company.

The next day, she saw a newspaper offer for the desired shoes. Different FSA advertising rules permitted her to buy the shoes right off the page.

Unable to check the fit, she was lucky; they felt just right. Tragically, she remains blind to her needs; she merely got what she wanted.

Peter Cave casts a satirical eye on the Financial Services Act know about my other shoes and dresses and the colour of my underwear - and about my carpets.

FA: Footwear affects, and is affected by, all manner of things. Does it match your clothing, even when you're undressing? Might slippers damage your floors?

C: I see...

A thousand-and-one weary sighs later, the client stumbles into the street; she is barefooted. It looks as if she needs shoes, but conclusions must not be drawn hastily.

Three weeks later, the adviser is explaining his lengthy report...

FA: So, we've projected from your current needs, ensuring you are well foot-clad throughout life.

C: But I came in just for a pair of shoes - not for a lifetime of laces. Where are the shoes I first saw?

FA: Unavailable, madam. They were in a sale.

C: But they're the ones I...

FA: Ah, you were going to use that naughty "want" word

ADVERTISEMENT

BUILDING SOCIETY INVESTMENT TERMS

Name of Society	Product	Essa	Essa	Essa	Essa	Interest	Minimum	Access and other details
Alliance & Latham
Home 90	7.00	7.00	5.25	5.25	Yy	Yy	£100,000	6.80% (w.e.f. 1/1/94)
Home 90	6.45	6.45	-	-	Yy	Yy	£10	28 days notice/withdrawal up to £10,000
Home 90	5.85	5.85	4.35	4.35	Yy	Yy	£100,000	3.50% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	4.85	4.85	3.45	3.45	Yy	Yy	£100,000	4.25% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	7.50	7.50	5.62	5.62	Yy	Yy	£100,000	7.50% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Bancroft
Home 90	7.50	7.50	5.25	5.25	Yy	Yy	£100,000	7.50% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	6.90	6.90	5.00	5.00	Yy	Yy	£100,000	6.90% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	7.00	7.00	5.25	5.25	Yy	Yy	£100,000	7.00% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Barnsley
Home 90	5.20	5.20	3.90	3.90	Yy	Yy	£100,000	5.20% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	4.50	4.50	3.45	3.45	Yy	Yy	£100,000	4.50% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	4.70	4.70	3.60	3.60	Yy	Yy	£100,000	4.70% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	4.90	4.90	3.80	3.80	Yy	Yy	£100,000	4.90% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Bathurst
Home 90	7.00	7.00	5.25	5.25	Yy	Yy	£100,000	7.00% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	6.40	6.40	4.80	4.80	Yy	Yy	£100,000	6.40% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	5.80	5.80	4.35	4.35	Yy	Yy	£100,000	5.80% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	5.20	5.20	3.90	3.90	Yy	Yy	£100,000	5.20% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Bellway
Home 90	7.00	7.00	5.25	5.25	Yy	Yy	£100,000	7.00% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	6.40	6.40	4.80	4.80	Yy	Yy	£100,000	6.40% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	5.80	5.80	4.35	4.35	Yy	Yy	£100,000	5.80% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	5.20	5.20	3.90	3.90	Yy	Yy	£100,000	5.20% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Bellway
Home 90	7.00	7.00	5.25	5.25	Yy	Yy	£100,000	7.00% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	6.40	6.40	4.80	4.80	Yy	Yy	£100,000	6.40% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	5.80	5.80	4.35	4.35	Yy	Yy	£100,000	5.80% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	5.20	5.20	3.90	3.90	Yy	Yy	£100,000	5.20% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Bellway
Home 90	7.00	7.00	5.25	5.25	Yy	Yy	£100,000	7.00% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	6.40	6.40	4.80	4.80	Yy	Yy	£100,000	6.40% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	5.80	5.80	4.35	4.35	Yy	Yy	£100,000	5.80% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	5.20	5.20	3.90	3.90	Yy	Yy	£100,000	5.20% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Bellway
Home 90	7.00	7.00	5.25	5.25	Yy	Yy	£100,000	7.00% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	6.40	6.40	4.80	4.80	Yy	Yy	£100,000	6.40% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,000,000
Home 90	5.80	5.80	4.35	4.35	Yy	Yy	£100,000	5.80% (w.e.f. 1/1/94) £250,000 £500,000 £1,0

NEWS FROM the NEW YEAR

MARKETS

London

Wishing for even more happy returns

By Andrew Bolger

Ring out the old, ring in the new. But before considering future prospects, investors and fund managers are entitled to indulge in some instant nostalgia for the year that has just passed.

A period which started amid general foreboding about Britain's rude exit from the European exchange rate mechanism, and the continuing grip of recession on the UK economy, turned into a vintage year for both the equity and bond markets.

During the year, pension funds enjoyed a 28 per cent return from UK equities, including dividends, according to the WM Company which monitors investment performance. Middle-sized and smaller companies significantly outperformed the FTSE-100, with returns of more than 38 per cent.

Bonds provided returns in excess of 83 per cent on the back of falling bond yields and stable inflationary conditions - the best return from UK bonds for a decade.

Although the level of mergers and acquisitions continued to fall, merchant bankers were able to keep busy with corporate restructuring, rights issues and flotations, which reached a five-year high.

The strength of the market allowed analysts and traders to enjoy large Christmas bonuses and saw a resumption of the jobs merry-go-round in the City, after a long period of retrenchment.

However, the unlucky few who came in to staff trading desks in the dog days between Christmas and the new year holidays had anything but a quiet life.

Arriving on Wednesday morning, they found overseas markets had raced ahead during the Christmas break, and during the day the FTSE-100 gained 49.7 to hit a new peak of 3,482. The fact that nearly all of the advance had been shed by the time dealing closed at lunchtime yesterday was more to do with technical factors

UK markets relative performance

Source: FT Graphs

than any underlying change in market sentiment during the week.

It emerged that many fund managers had been content with the gains they achieved during the market's autumn surge, and sought to lock these in by using the increasingly popular derivatives market. However, few had foreseen that the FTSE-100 would gain another 5 per cent in December, following the City's relief over the November 30 Budget.

Some big institutions therefore had to scramble to buy shares to cover positions they had taken in the futures market. Once those contracts had been unwound, the pressure on prices quickly abated and the FTSE-100 yesterday closed at 3,418.4, up a mere 6.1 on the week.

What might have seemed an unusual week in trading terms, demonstrated the importance of two factors which have dominated UK equities in recent months: the relative performance of overseas markets and investment decisions by the big funds.

There are of course more fundamental reasons for the increase in the UK market: falling interest rates and lower returns on competing investments, combined with evidence that the domestic recovery is at last gathering strength.

However, much of the market's recent strength has come from overseas investors seeking a good return - particularly US investment funds, which have seen Wall Street perform only modestly in spite of the continuing recovery.

The chart shows that London has lagged behind the other European markets - not to mention Hong Kong - even though the UK is expected in 1994 to be the strongest growing major European economy for the second successive year.

This vote of confidence from overseas sits uneasily besides widespread concern in London that the UK market's current rating is counting on a recovery in earnings that companies will find difficult to deliver, given the fragility of consumer confidence, continuing insecurity over employment, and the tax burden which will be imposed on the economy when the Budget increases take effect in April.

Equity strategists at UBS believe that the UK might be about to enjoy a "golden scenario" - favourable growth and low inflation, crowned by a substantive fall in the budget deficit, combined with firm sterling and lower interest rates.

However, they caution: "The gold turns to dross in later years of this parliament, a reverse alchemy brought about by the Britain's deeper structural problems. Although Mr Clarke's Budget clearly recognised some of the dangers, the chancellor's modest measures will not in our judgment prevent a medium-term resurgence of inflation."

Nikko, the Japanese securities house, also sees some scope for further advance by the UK market in the new year, in response to further falls in interest rates.

But it cautions: "As reality dawns, with the bottoming out of interest rates, lower consumer confidence and a slowdown in the recovery, the market is expected to stagnate."

Year-end forecasts range from an unchanged 3,400 up to 4,000, but many market watchers believe there could be a substantial fall in share prices if and when the present cycle of low interest rates turns - as it could soon in the US.

In this rather twitzy environment, investors are likely to seek out sectors and companies which have so far missed out on the market's advance. Motors may benefit from the combination of lower interest rates and increased growth. As the reality of the slow economic recovery sinks in, investors might also look to sectors which offer more defensive qualities.

Nikko also highlights the food retailers, which have underperformed massively and have a captive market, and domestic brewers and health and household companies, which it believes offers above-market earnings performance after a period of huge underperformance.

Serious Money

And now it's time to say goodbye

By Philip Coggan, personal finance editor

This is the last column I shall write on personal finance, so perhaps readers will forgive a spot of self-indulgence as I look back over 3½ years in the job. Back in 1990, the first thing that struck me about personal finance was the gap between the ideal and the reality. Finance is an incredibly complex subject and few consumers, however enthusiastic, can be expected to grasp all the details.

In the ideal world, the consumer would know where to go to find objective, expert advice - just as, in the world of transport, one can summon the AA man to ask his unbiased opinion on a used car. But, in the real world, there is a complex structure of salesmen, tied agents and independent financial advisers plus an alphabet soup of regulators.

It is easy for a consumer to be bewildered if told "Hello, I'm a Fimbra-registered IFA." Even if you understand what that meant, because of the commission system, you still could not be sure of receiving an unbiased view.

The FT has consistently taken the line that the system of commission, whereby an adviser or salesman is paid by the company for selling a product and not by the customer for the advice given, is open to abuse. The personal pension scandal puts the problem in a nutshell. Salesmen knew they would earn lots of money if they recommended a transfer into a personal pension, but nothing at all if they told people to stay put. Surprise, surprise. They recommended a transfer, often without completing the paperwork properly.

At last, things are changing. New rules will mean that investors must be told how much commission salesmen and advisers earn. Not only is this right in itself, it will give a boost to the system of fee-based advice, which we believe is much more likely to give consumers an impartial view. Until now, many consumers have been unwilling to pay fees, because they believe they are getting "free" advice elsewhere.

□ □ □

When I started this job in August 1990, it was a great time to invest in equities and bonds. But many savers preferred the 15 per cent they could receive from cash and now are contemplating dwindling building society incomes. I have consistently prodded savers to diversify from cash. Alas, I went wrong this year and under-estimated the scale of the rally which has taken the stock market from very high historic valuations to even higher ones. Inflation has fallen much further than I expected; that has made investors very optimistic about the prospects for falling interest rates and has caused a massive shift from cash and into equities and bonds.

Nevertheless, I am still nervous about the level of share prices. Are low inflation and slow economic growth really compatible with soaring corporate profits? And if we have moved to a low inflation era, should we still value the market on the basis of the yield ratio used in the inflationary 1970s and 1980s? After all, for much of the 1950s, equities yielded more than bonds.

□ □ □

One thing I did get right this year was to draw readers attention to the O'Higgins theory. This was developed by an American fund manager who looked at the 10 highest-yielding shares in the Dow-Jones index and then picked the five with the lowest absolute share prices. A portfolio consisting of these stocks outperformed the Dow by an average of around 9 per cent a year between 1973 and 1981. I applied the theory to the FT-30 index and found it seemed to work in the UK, too. At the start of the year, the method picked five stocks: Blue Circle, British Gas, Fortis, Hanson and Lucas. The average gain for the five this year (including gross dividends) was 46.8 per cent; the All-Share (also including dividends) is up 28.7 per cent.

Of course, the theory does not work every year (it just seems to work over the long term) and a portfolio of just five stocks inevitably will involve more risk. Besides which, the FT-30 index is hardly used these days, so that could affect the theory's success. Still, I am sufficiently encouraged to apply the theory again to the FT-30's present constituents: Allied Lyons, Asda, BICC, Blue Circle, BOC, BTR, Boots, BA, British Gas, BP, BT, Cadbury Schweppes, Courtaulds, Fortis, GEC, Glaxo, GrandMet, GKN, Guinness, Hanson, ICI, Lucas, M&S, NatWest, P&O, Reuters, Royal Insurance, SmithKline Beecham, Tate & Lyle and Thorn EMI.

The result is that three of 1993's selections are picked again: British Gas (344p, 5.2 per cent yield); Hanson (273.5p, 5.2 per cent); and Lucas (197p, 4.4 per cent). The additions are BICC (408p, 5.9 per cent yield) and Tate & Lyle (397p, 4.1 per cent). All figures are based on the FT of December 30.

One reader asked what the O'Higgins method would choose in the US. Based on December 29 closing prices, the system would select American Express, DuPont, Eastman Kodak, Union Carbide and Woolworth.

Finally, my thanks to all those readers who wrote over the years, with questions, suggestions and (mostly constructive) criticism. May your portfolios prosper.

HOW SHARES HAVE MOVED

The following table shows the percentage movement in the FT Ordinary share index and its constituents during 1993. The FTSE 100, FTSE Mid 250, FTSE-A 350 and the FT-A All-Share indices are also shown.

	Price at start of 1993	% change 1993	Price at end of 1993		Price at start of 1993	% change 1993	Price at end of 1993
	Dec. 31	in year	1993		Dec. 31	in year	1993
			Low				Low
FT-SE 100 Index	2416.4	+30.06	3142.0	2737.5	Ferte	241	+30.53	289	170
FT-SE Mid 250	2791.5	+32.45	3697.0	2878.3	GSC	3611	+30.46	3676	264
FT-SE-A 350	1703.0	+23.64	2121.3	1946.7	GMO	528	+17.56	623	434
FT-A All-Share	1652.17	+33.34	2199.76	1930.19	Glaxo	739	-6.88	681	509
FT Ordinary	2288.6	+17.13	2682.7	2184.7	Grand Met	475	+5.15	492	273
Asda	501	+4.53	523	495	Guinness	4772	-7.68	421	385
Allied-Lyons	580	+5.75	607	577	Hamson	2801	+14.59	2905	222
BICC	402	+13.20	455	418	ICI	530	+55.29	824	625
BOC	680	+13.07	770	590	Imco Ltd.	192	+45.45	190	120
BP	300	+46.07	366	228	Luxor & Systech	4531	+37.63	6115	311
BT	4781	+17.10	4999	378	Midwest Bank	520	+15.28	534	398
British Airways	449	+10.02	493	346	P & O Stead.	544	+25.02	678	504
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327	Reckers	1787	+26.82	1988	1340
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418	Royal Indes	540	+35.00	747	248
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340	Saatchi, Saatchi & A	404	+16.85	513	373
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340	Tate & Lyle	400	-0.74	438	355
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327	Thorn EM	990	+12.37	1017	809
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar	558	+6.30	593	418
British Telecom	449	+22.04	548	340
British Airways	449	+22.04	548	340
British Gas	341	+17.10	399	327
British Sugar

